

plimented Colonel Bartlet very highly there-upon.

When the regiment recrossed the river and landed again on Canadian soil, the Colonel, in dismissing the men, expressed his great gratification at their appearance and behavior, and his pride in being their chief officer. "There is only one other thing that I am prouder of than being at the head of this regiment," said he, "and that is being superintendent of the Sabbath school in my church," and the men gave him a cheer with a hearty good-will.
