THEIFALL OF THE LEAVES.

" Leaves have their time to tall, and flower they teach comes home to us. Along the busy streets and quiet avenues we watch these golden-finted leaves, touched by the hand of time, silently yielding to the univereal law of pature. The beautiful leaves trampled by the busy throng. Poor, fallen of life, or at least its ultimate dealiny. This still quiet passage from life to death is, or should be, to the reflective mind a lesson fraught with that strange, mysterious coange we all have to undergo sooner or later.

In the spring time these self-same leaves, now fellen and orushed, builded forth from their parent bough as youth from lafancy, full of life, vigor and beauty; they opened their fibres to the genial influence of light and heat, drank in deep draughts of life, and began the incessant work of absorption-to live-to breathe. These golden-tinted leaves were once green, iresh and beautiful. Their young, glad life was glorious to behold. They revelled in the bright sunlight. The conservative forces of nature caused this onigrowth of freeh, green, healthful life. These lasves were full of joy in their emerald rober, they rejulced and were happy.

Gudually they matured. Their infantine softness of color-that tint so charming in the new growth-has atiained a deeper that; Its delicscy has become strength. Tho joyous spring-lime has passed. They no longer thiver and think in their frail life from the cold, frosty winds that threaten their new existence with annihilation.

Ohr oh street, Toronto, where thousands of Poor leaves! through how many hardships diseases of the Head, Thront and Lungs by have you gone. How you trembled at the Spirometer the present opportunity is em- angry voices of the north which How welbrated of making known to the people of come was the bright sunlight after a night Canada this fact, and also the opinions of of storm and tempest. How strong and brave you appear in your rich summer dress. How self-relient and happy you are in this escond stage of life. In your careless strength you dofy the hard rains and high winds of summer, although your pride is often humbled.

But lo! the season advances I you begin to realize that your tenure of life, O leaves! is As a general thing hemorrhage from the not so secure as you imagined. Old age creeps True it is seldon patients recover from lung on apace. The dread destroyer of all vitality is near at hand. Your time has come, O disease who have had severe hemorrhages leaves? You fall-you are falling. You without the very best cars and treatment. can no longer affor i to those, that now crush Still many cases have recovered fully under properly directed treatment who have had and trample on you, the cool and refreshing chade they were so glad to seek but a short several severe attacks of bleeding from the while ago. You are not of any faither service to man, and he tramples on you. Buch is life! Such is the fate of these who are so unfortunate as to fail from greatness or get left behind in the race of life.

Yes, the leaves are falling. They presented their faces to the rays of the rising sur, and This dreaded disease is seldom developed in a few months. It is slowly and gradually adorned themselves with the golden powder of the dawn. Even so, youth presents its fancies to the sun of the world, and adorns incidiouely, but often as a result of other dicitself with its illusions and its dreams. Yes, cases of the air passages of which the patient they are still falling. In all their burnished is perfectly cognissnt, but foolishly allows to glory they lie and the ilngering beams of the setting can discover them wrapt in the Felno earthly power can restore them to health. How winding sheet of death. And because them to health. After the positive symptoms of consumption have been developed, there is always an uncertainty in the progness. We meditations. The peor leaves seem so wrapt and quiet in the still autumnal evenings that they appear to maditate, as men do in the enumer of life - beginning to think of the individual case and such constitutional treatment as the case demands. We also find winter.

Poor, falling leaves! Where do they go? They seem to feel the frail bond that unites them to their stem; and this bond is everything-courage, power, life and hope. With man the tenure is much the came-his tie is castly sundered that sustains him to lifeclimax has already been reached, loss no time | and, when he teels it lossening, the great anchor of the soul is clutched at-Hope! As the leaves oling tenacionaly to their parent stem, so man clings to the only cartal support that his soul can find the Intallible teachings of His Churchvolved. Heavy colds and inflammation of trachings, which unfortunately for so many the lungs, or please, or both, debility of the centuries have so often received like treatment system, which predisposes to any of the above as the poor fallen leaves—been trampled and spat upon by the heedless crowds, in their wild ruth through the world's highways. Ununiversality fit emblems of Christ's Church on earth), what is it that you murmur? B :are a regular cough, it may be very little, but | queathe us your thoughts. They arewer: The breez's that we welcomed yesterda; laden with delicious perfumes are to-day mouraful winds. We test that they are but the harbingers of death. They sweep over us and we feel our bond loosening. can arrest these winds of death? Yesterday we were strong and wrestled with them, but today! to-day we feel conclous that our power of resistance is failing us. These winds are but the breath of the Infinite, who carries us along with Him in his course, who draws u; irresistibly, and we go.

What can we do without this support in life? What is left us to do after this bond is sovered, leaves and men? To fall-all to fell. The glorious sun that welcomed our birth requires us no longer. The warmth of his genial rays which in the springtime gave us life is no longer sufficient to protect us from the destroying winds. We live, love, and enjoy. Like the leaves, rejoice and revel in our springtime of life; in the summer we are careless in our false socurity and fancy we are strong. In the Aniumn we grow wiser and meditate; for, like the leaves, we feel that our life-bond is not for all time, and with them we realize the approach of the season of decay. It is time the poor leaves succumb. The wind that drew from them barmonicus and voluptuous mucmura-to-day wings from them only a bitter farewell. We go. All life must end. Every day has its black night from whence comes the cry unknown! Here we cease to resemble the leaves. We fall, but our farewell is not one of despair-or need not be; for we feel conscious that our death is but our arrival at the portal of a new lifenot unknown, but revealed. Hops, Faith, and Love are our passports. We do not drlit oxysm. This latter will only relieve the with the leaves. Unhappy leaves! we must part With you our animal life is governed by the same laws, and but for this new life infused into us by the suffering and death of Him who come for this end, our destiny would not be unlike. But for this anchor of hope we too would drift to the unknown. But poor, unhappy leaves, we must part eternally-our spiritual life is a barrier across which you can never pass-therefore, poor leaver, we must say farewell!

We are lost in wonder at this ellent and tranquil decay. All around is peace. The poor fluttering leaves they fall around us in trembling silence. They tremble in the morning to set the sun rise in the autumn. In the spring they are glad if these bring these life and hope. Now, this same inex-crable sun will dissect their immost cells in order to say to them-die!

Poor leaves, farewell! Who knows how soon we will follow! Where do you go? To eternal death? The leaves fluttering to the earth laugh at us, and cry-we are not dead. Like yours, ours is but a change of existence.

There is no death. We but follow the law of progression. But where do you go? To seek that strange partnership, the germ of to wither st the neith wine's treath." Szd, will unite to as instance below the enrines of pathetic lines! At this season their beautit the earth, and form an element of now life ful pathes strikes one foreibly. We think in order to re-appear in another shap). Farclife, in the tosom of decay. But bow? We with sachess of the poor leaves, for the lesson | well! And I? The leaves do not shewer. They are slient. Then we feel within us the faith of the resurrection, and God, not the leavis, speaks to our souls through the median of that divine institution which stands to-day, as it has these eighteen conturies, and as it will continue to stand through all time, leaves! You will linger on our graves more the impregnable fortress—the emblement tenderly some day.
