

WHAT VIN MARIANI IS

A multitude of so-called "Coca-Wines" are yearly dished out on the market, which are nothing more than a simple admixture of cocaine with ordinary wine.

VIN MARIANI, the world renowned tonic, is a preparation of an agreeable and wholesome French wine, especially selected because of its peculiar qualities, and BOTTLED IN COCA, the medicinal quality which are well known to the medical profession.

Beware of cheap alcoholic stimulants sold as tonics, as they often contain deleterious ingredients which will harm your health.

ALL DRUGGISTS—EVERYWHERE

WEIRD FLIGHT IN MUKDEN'S FIELD RUSSIANS LIKE SCARED SHEEP

Horrors of Retreat—Orgies of Beaten Troops, Drunk With Vodka and Wandering in Dust Storm.

The New York Herald publishes the following from its correspondent, Mr. Francis McCullagh, who was captured by the Japanese during the battle of Mukden:

This is the story of the orgy and the panic of the Russian evacuation from Mukden. Some features of it are almost incredible, but I have photographs and signed statements to prove them. The Russians were demoralized at the outset by the destruction of their stores March 3, when a large amount of supplies were burned around the city. The Japanese, on the other hand, were in the extreme right. Vodka casks were opened with swords and hatchets, and the men knelt down to drink the muddy liquor which was flowing ankle deep on the ground. Some used as goblets the cases of exploded Japanese shells which fell around them. Sometimes the men were drunk and accidentally fired their rifles, and the Japanese were half a mile away caused a commotion, but the soldiers soon resumed their orgy, all disobeying their officers. Thousands of soldiers were lying around in drunken stupor, and wounded officers were so intoxicated that they were only able to crawl around.

Alcoholic Demons in Smoke. The storm enveloped the scene, giving the frenzied crowd the appearance of alcoholic demons in a hell of smoke. The soldiers developed Anglophobic sentiments, and were dangerous for me, but Rikacheff, the Russian newspaper correspondent, helped me to escape. A similar scene occurred at Fushan, where the Russians call Quanshan, and afterwards at the Japanese camp. On March 4 I returned to Mukden, where I found a remarkable assembly of armed and wounded Russians in the Russian service. They were young men, gorgeously dressed and fierce as tigers. They drew their swords on the spectators on the slightest provocation, and the terror-stricken citizens of Mukden gazed at them from afar, not knowing why these men were assembled, or what became of them.

Mukden in Flames. On Friday morning, March 10, I found that Mukden had been evacuated during the night. The Russian settlement was burning, and drunken soldiers were throwing handfuls of cartridges into the flames. The Japanese were marching along the railway. Several miles to the north I found 5000 men, the debris of the Russian army, lying behind the railway embankment, under heavy fire from the east. Many corpses were lying about, and the fields were strewn for a dozen miles with provisions, rifles, cartridges and dead horses. The leader of this force said that he had been farther north, but that the Japanese had driven him back. Every body was demoralized, for the soldiers knew they were surrounded.

In the evening I went east with the intention of making a wide detour to avoid the Japanese. Wounded men were strewn thick on the ground, and I saw many dead. "Brothers, do not abandon us," I gave my horse to a wounded man who had lost his own in the confusion of the retreat. I helped place other wounded soldiers on carriages un-so the Japanese made them run. I traveled with them to Liny, where we met other captured newspaper correspondents. The Russians remained all night in open railway trucks, the it was bitterly cold. The Japanese all along the route.

Russians complained to me, saying the Japanese prisoners were better treated, but I do not believe that the Japanese intended to humiliate them. Some Russians bore their humiliation uncomplainingly after joking with the guards, squabbling among themselves and praying frequently.

The Japanese display the greatest martial ardor. They are anxious to take Harbin and Vladivostok.

Personally I was treated with the greatest courtesy.

HE FINDS A NEW EXPLOSIVE.

Chemist for 50 Years Blows Himself Up for First Time.

New York, April 9.—Dr. Ludwig H. Friedberg, an instructor in chemistry in the college of the City of New York, met with an accident in the laboratory of the college yesterday which has cost him his eyesight if he had not been wearing glasses. Dr. Friedberg was engaged in a chemical experiment and was holding a test tube over a Bunsen burner when the contents exploded, blowing him back and driving pieces into his face.

There were only 15 grains of the explosive in the test tube, and it was a small quantity, but it was enough to do the work. Dr. Friedberg held the mouth of the tube away from him and the bottom about three inches above the burner.

For a long time he has wondered what properties this acid or drainage from nitrocellulose had, and yesterday while he was alone in the laboratory and likely to be free from disturbance, he decided to try to find out.

Nitrocellulose is a combination of the two acids and is an acid relative to indigo. In the acid or residue left by the combination, Dr. Friedberg is satisfied that he has found a new and very powerful explosive.

Partners in Kuhn, Loeb & Co. Find Japanese Loan Irksome.

New York, April 9.—Successful subscribers to the Japanese loan have received certificates for the amount of bonds allowed them. Each one of these certificates has the signature of the American bankers who have had charge of the issue. Something like 80,000 certificates have been sent out by Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the bankers, having had a most tiresome job to do.

By law the certificates must be signed by a member of the firm. No clerk can sign the labor of the bank. Every signature is a matter of record, and the Japanese loan is a matter of record. Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the bankers, have had a most tiresome job to do.

THE TORONTO WORLD COMPLIMENTS FRENCH DIPLOMACY DOES THE KAISER'S BAD HUMOR

Emperor William Has Been the Leading Figure of Past Week in Game of European Politics.

Paris, April 9.—There is no denying the fact that the dominating political figure of the past week has been Emperor William. He has been the leading figure of the past week in the game of European politics. He has been the leading figure of the past week in the game of European politics.

As everyone knows, the Mediterranean powers—France, England, Italy and Spain—came to an agreement among themselves recently concerning Morocco, the internal anarchy of which country has become inimical to French interests as represented in Algeria. France, thus being the neighbor in the case, submitted to the Emperor of Morocco a regular program of reforms which were guaranteed to regenerate the country.

King Edward and by interviews between the British sovereign and M. Loubet. This then, was the most beautiful state of affairs when Emperor William begins his annual cruise in the Mediterranean. He goes to Tangier, and there in private chat and public speech declares the Emperor of Morocco, beyond the peradventure of a doubt, an independent sovereign.

Direct Threat at France. Harbored this may be there is no doubting the fact that this little move on the Kaiser's part was a direct threat at French policy, and yet the Emperor's utterance was received by the press here with unusual tranquillity.

This was owing partly to the fact that even the jingoists know that such an incident could not lead to a conflict of arms. And then again, the press was not unhappy to see the German Emperor thus putting himself in a really bad position by laying bare his heart.

But what could have been his motive? Did he merely wish to nurse his popularity by showing himself eager as ever to safeguard German commercial interests, or did he desire to sound a warning to French diplomacy, which has persisted all these years in forgetting that there was a German Emperor? Perhaps he was merely annoyed at the spread of good will, at the spectacle of France strengthening her bonds of friendship with one neighbor after another.

The again, it is possible that none of these is the proper explanation, but that the Emperor is playing a moral practical game with a definite prize. For he has been England make concessions to France in Morocco and concessions to France in England in England in England.

See Warship at Europe. Now Emperor William perhaps would like to remind certain statesmen in Europe that he has something to say on a matter of importance. This is not the first "break" that the Kaiser has made. France feels no rankle from it. As a matter of fact, the Emperor's bad humor is the very best compliment that he could pay to French diplomacy.

He found certain depressions
