TURN BOGS INTO GARDENS

IS BAY STATE PROPOSAL

Boston, Sept. 5.—(Associated Press.)—The intent of the act is declared to be to meet an ever growing need for agricultural land in these days of rapidly expanding towns and cities.

Financing has been the main problem in former reclamation projects in Massachusetts. The present law provides three separate methods: funds may be raised by assessments in a given district, and deposited with the state treasurer; the members of the district may vote to incur debt, to be liquidated according to the terms of the law; or the old method of financing by appropriations by county commissioners may be adopted.

The law is held also to apply to lowlands in need of irrigation, and it is believed that such territory may be developed with the district methods outlined. The intent of the act is declared to be to help the people to help themselves. It is a private matter supervised and encouraged by the state, and according to agricultural authorities, represents a movement of the greatest promise.

Paper of good quality is made from the eucalyptus tree.
