FASHIONABLE WAIST MODEL

New model for ladies blouse, carried out in rice cloth and trimmed with trills of batiste and fancy buttons arranged in groups on the collar and cuffs.

Rice cloth is used to make some of the lovely summer blouses of inexpensive design. The model shown here is quilted and has the fashionable raglan effect at the shoulders. The neck is "shaped," while the front of the blouse is tabbed with an accordion pleated buttons trim the collar, being in groups of five buttons each.

the waist, for the material runs from 43 to 44 inches wide. One yard of pleated batiste and 2 1/2 dozen buttons will be needed for the trimming.

It is not a difficult matter to put the waist together. First the sleeve is sewed to the front and back as notched, giving the raglan effect. Instead of making a seam the edges may be turned under and pinned or hemstitching used, giving a dainty finish. Close under-arm and sleeve seams as notched, leaving sleeve seam free below.

Large "O" perforation. Adjust cuff to position on long sleeve, notches at lower edges even. Sew large collar to neck edge and standing collar to shield as notched. Gather lower edge of front and back between double "O" perforations. Sew belt to lower edge of front and back, centers even (large "O" perforations in belt at under-arm seam; fold belt through center).

INDIES, TWICE TO SOUTH AFRICA, TWICE TO INDIA, AND TWICE TO CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES. At Ottawa he played a match in the snow, and in America he had the unusual experience of being soundly beaten by a native eleven. At Zion, he shone in every form of athletics from leap-frog to sprinting, but it is as a big-game hunter that he is only less famous than as a knight of the "willow." He has hunted in both the Rockies and the Andes, and, in 1896, went on a hunting expedition with Colonel W. F. Cody, nearly lost their lives, being snowed up amongst the mountains.

His Greatest Trip

Lord Hawke's biggest trip, however, was in the spring of 1892, when he lived in camp for four months at the foot of the Himalayas, shooting every day. The encampment comprised no fewer than forty elephants and twenty camels, and the "bag" included thirteen tigers, two leopards, swamp-deer, chital, and other ferocious denizens of the jungle. On another expedition, Lord Hawke got nine tigers all to himself.

CRICKET SOUVENIRS are still more numerous. They include photographs of all the teams Lord Hawke has captained and all the eleven he has taken to different parts of the world. Here, too, is the ball of which his county scored 887 runs against Warwickshire in one innings in 1894. Four centuries were made in that innings, and Lord Hawke was one of the scoring quartette.

This great cricketer is a bachelor. He succeeded to the title on the death of his father, in 1887, at which time, by the way, he was playing cricket in Australia. He captained Yorkshire for nearly twenty-five years, and how he is thought of in his own county is well illustrated by a story that is told concerning a dispute about the village cricket match.

The umpire had given a decision which considerably enraged a batsman. The latter declared that the umpire could not have been paying proper attention to the game, whereupon spectators and players settled themselves down in keen expectation of a fight.

"What dost thou know of cricket?" asked the umpire at last.

"Here, indeed, was a point, but the man with the bat was equal to it. Drawing himself up proudly, he replied, "I know more than you do, 'any rate.' Then, curling his lower lip with sublime disdain, he added, "Awww! I shook hands with Lord 'Awke! That's more than you ever did; so there?"

This reference to Lord Hawke settled it, and the umpire retired a beaten man.

A return relating to the amount of the British national debt at the close of each financial year since 1885-86 shows that the gross liabilities of the state, including treasury bills temporarily paid off, amounted on March 31 last to $707,641,110, a decrease of $2,684,811 as compared with March 31, 1913. The reduction in the funded debt amounted to $278,285, the total being $28,717,872. On January 5, 1886, the gross liabilities of the state amounted to $340,027,745, the highest total recorded during the period. The smallest was $288,898,784 on March 31, 1899.

A NOBLE SPORTSMAN

Baron Hawke Famous Cricketer, Traveler and Big Game Hunter

(Times Special Correspondence)

London, July 6—One of the most genuinely interesting men and most popular heroes in all the British Empire has just been paid a great and, all admit, a well merited honor.

The man in question is Martin Bladen, 7th Baron Hawke, a famous cricketer, traveler and big-game hunter, who comes down in a direct line from the doughty old sea-dog of the same name who thrashed the French off Belle Isle in 1759, and the honor that has just been paid him consists in his election as president of the Marylebone Cricket Club which, as everyone who knows anything about cricket is aware is by far the biggest cricket organization going, and the governing body so far as British cricket is concerned.

No man living has done more for the game of cricket than Lord Hawke, who, in fact, has been a sort of missionary for the national sport of these islands, having popularized it in many strange and far-off lands. In the course of some thirty years of adventurous wanderings over the earth's surface, he is estimated to have covered more than 150,000 miles. A few years ago, His Lordship received a national testimonial which he did not in the least want, in recognition of his work in this connection.

Characteristically, too, Lord Hawke, who is now fifty-four, has done his best to bridge the social chasm which, in this country, yawns between the amateur and the professional cricketer. This chasm is a wide one so one indication of which it may be mentioned that, when reporting cricket matches, the newspapers are careful to discriminate painstakingly printing the initials of each player's name in the case of the amateurs and refraining from doing so in the case of the "pros." At all cricket grounds, too, amateurs leave and enter by one gate and professionals by another, but Lord Hawke, since first he began playing the game, has made a point of using the professionals' gate, a little act of courtesy that has not lessened his personal popularity.

Cricket-matches have taken him to Australia, New Zealand, and the West

To Discard Freckles, Tan, Pimples, Wrinkles

The use of creams on the face sometimes causes hair to grow thicker by avoiding chemicals as hair is naturally soft. There is nothing better for any condition of the skin, as the wax actually absorbs the offensive cuticle. The latter is naturally replaced by a clear, smooth, healthy complexion full of life and expression. It's the sensible way to discard a freckled, tanned, over-red, blotchy or pimply skin. Get an ounce of mocolized wax at any druggist's and apply nightly the cold cream, creating in the morning with soap and water. It takes a week or so to complete the transformation.

The ideal wrinkle eradicator is made by dissolving an ounce of powdered exfolite in a half pint witch hazel. Bathing the face in the solution brings almost instantaneous results.
