"Mr. Todd, I am very sorry that you were kept waiting, my dear sir; but I was at the moment engaged with an excellent and most Christian testator."

"Here he suddenly jumped and dried up as if he were a fish, and with the slightest effort he said: 'These your Christian testator. And, look here, Todd, just you see that it does not happen again. I'm a Christian testator, too; and Christians of my own sex's acquaintance to be kept standing about just like office boys or waiters. So that it does happen again, Todd.'"

"'Oh, never mind all that—I want my will.'"

"'Will—will—Forgive me—a little confused, don't you? Your manner is so full of hearty old middle age's kind of vigor.'"

"Here he stopped, more suddenly even than usual, for Mr. Messon jerked him with his savage eye, and in that jerked him out of the room to look for the document in question."

"'Little fellow!' muttered Messon; 'I'll give him the sack, too, if he isn't more careful. By Jove! why should I not have my own resident solicitor? I could get a sharp hand with a damaged character for about three hundred pounds a year, and I pay that old Todd quite two thousand pounds. There is a vacant place in the Hutches that I could turn into an office. Hang me if I don't do it. I will make that little phlegm-grasping jump to some purpose. I'll warrant,' said he, chuckling the idea."

"Just then Mr. Todd returned with the will, and before he could begin to make any explanation his employer cut him short with a sharp order to read the gist of it."

"This the lawyer proceeded to do. It was very short, and, with the exception of a few legacies, amounting in all to about twenty thousand pounds, bequeathed all the testator's vast fortune and estates, including his (by far the largest) interest in the great publishing house, and his palace, with the paintings and other valuable contents, known as Poupard Hall, to his nephew, Eustace H. Messon."

"'Very well,' he said, when the reading was finished, 'now give it to me.' Mr. Todd obeyed, and handed the document to his patron, who deliberately sent it into fragments with his strong fingers, and then completed its destruction by tearing it with his big white teeth. This done he mist the little pieces up, threw them on the floor, and stamped upon them with an air of malignity that almost frightened little Mr. Todd."

"'Now, then,' he grimly said, 'there's an end of the old love; so let's on with the new. Take your pen and receive my instructions for my will.'"

"'I leave all my property, real and personal, to be divided in equal shares between my two partners, Alfred Tom Addison and Cecil Spooner Roscoe. There, that's short and sweet, and, one way and another, it means a couple of millions.'"

"'Good heavens! sir,' jerked out Mr. Todd. 'Why, do you mean to quite out your nephew—and the other legatee?' he added, by way of an afterthought."

"'Oh! come! I do; that is, as regards my nephew. The legatee may stand as before.'"

"'Well, all I have to say,' went on the little man, astonished into honesty, 'is that it is the most shameful thing I ever heard of!'"

"'Indeed, Mr. Todd, is it? Well, now, may I ask you—am I leaving this property or are you? Don't trouble yourself to answer that, however, but just attend. Either you draw up that will as once, while I wait, or you say good-bye to about two thousand pounds a year, for that's what Messon's business is worth, I reckon. Now you take your choice.'"

"Mr. Todd did take his choice. It was under an hour the will, which was very short, was drawn and signed."

"'How then,' said Messon, addressing himself to Mr. Todd and the managing clerk, as he looked the quill between his fingers to sign, 'do you two bear in mind that at the moment I execute this will I am of sound mind, memory, and understanding. There you are: now do you two witness.'"

"It was night, and King Capital, in the shape of Mr. Messon, sat alone at dinner in his palatial dining-room at Poupard Hall. Dinner was over. The powdered footmen had departed with stately tread, and the head-butler was just placing the decanters of richly colored wine before this solitary lord of all. The dinner had been a melancholy failure. Dish after dish, the cost of any one of which would have fed a poor child for a month, had been brought up and handed to the master only to be found fault with and sent away. On that night Mr. Messon had no appetite."

"'Johnson,' he said to the butler when he was sure the footmen could not hear him, 'has Mr. Eustace been here?'" when he was really happy were when he was in his counting-house, and adding sovereign by sovereign to his enormous accumulations. That had been his one joy for forty years, and it was still his joy."

And then he fell to thinking of his nephew, the only son of his brother whom he had once loved, before he lost himself in publishing books and making money, and sighed. He had been attached to the lad in his own course way, and it was a blow to him to cut himself loose from him. But Eustace had defied him, and—what was worse—he had told him the truth, which he, of all men, could not bear. He had said that his system of trade was dishonest, that it should be told him, and that his whole life should thereby be discredited, and even his accumulated gold tarnished—stamped as ill-gotten; least of all could he bear it from his dependent. He was not altogether a bad man, nobody is. He was only a coarse, vulgar tradesman, hardened and dodged by a long career of sharp dealing. At the bottom he had his feelings like other men, but he could not tolerate exposure or even contradiction; therefore he had revenged himself. And yet, as he sat in his solitary glory, he realized that to revenge does not bring happiness, and could even find it in his heart to envy the steadfast honesty that had defied him at the cost of his own ruin."

Not that he meant to relent or alter his determination. Mr. Messon never repented and never changed his mind; but he did so, he would not at that moment have been the master of two millions of money."
