telling."

"Do let us have it!" they all exclaimed.

Mr. K. looked out over the star-gemmed waters reflectively. "It was more years ago than I realized when I recalled the incident," he said. "I was little more than a boy and had just started in, with a capital of hopes, to make my own way in the world. I was traveling for a wholesale house in Chicago and covered small inland towns within a radius of a few hundred miles of that centre. While reasonably successful everywhere else, I was kept dissatisfied centre. While reasonably successful everywhere else, I was kept dissatisfied by the fact that the largest dealer in a Michigan village in my circuit would have nothing to do with me. The home firm observed with displeased surprise that M. Gray's name was never on my order sheet, and time after time I renewed my solicitations for his patronage, only to be gruffly and unceremoniously dismissed.

'One rainy day in early spring I was in the town, and as my way led past his door I gathered my courage for a last attack. There was the usual terse dialogue, and then the proprietor turned abruptly away and went into his little private office, which was built up like a huge box in the centre of the store—something after the fashion of Tim Linkinwater's den in the office of the Cheeryble Brothers.

Cheeryble Brothers.

"Outside the rain poured furiously, and I sat down on an empty cracker box to wait for it to slacken. I began whistling in an undertone, as much to rally my spirits as anything, I guess, and presently the door of the office unclosed the width of a couple of inches and the rasping voice of the obdurate storekeeper called: storekeeper called:
"'John, who's that?"

"John, who start"

"The young man from Chicago, sir," answered the lanky youth, respectfully.
"I finished the air.
"John, came the voice again, "tell, him he might give us another tune."
"I complied, and at its close the dealer, was sitting beside me on the cracker, box.

"'Give me your book, young man,' he said; 'when you want an order for your house here you can—just whistle "He slapped his hand down on his knee and laughed at his own joke and astonished me by giving me at once a large and important order. That was the beginning of it. He became one of our best customers, always insisting, however, upon the fulfillment of my part of the contract. A little finsight into his character proved that the somewhat harsh exterior covered a heart as big and tender as a friend could possibly desire, and the years of our acquaintance resolved our relations into those of remarkable confidence and comradeship."

Mr. K. paused, the serious look deepening on his face.

"And then?"—Helen Harper knew that there must be more to the story.

"Our acquaintance had covered a that there must be more to the story.

'Our acquaintance had covered a period of three years," he resumed, "increasing all the time in intimacy and mutual esteem, and one day as we returned from a late drive through the country together Mr. Gray said, with a little nervous shifting of the lines and a catch in his usually smooth voice: K. I've a favor to ask of you. I'm a bluff sort of a man, as you have reason to know, but I know you'll give me credit for a reasonable share of common sense. What I want to say is this You've been coming to this town for quite a spell now, and like as not you'll keep right on coming as long as you're on the road. Every time you have been here for the last three years you have been here for the last three years you have been in my store, and you've humored the old man by sitting there along in the twilight and whistling for him. And I tell you now, wherever I am that music is good enough for me. Now, my boy, when you come here again and go into my store to ask for me they will tell you that I am dead. I know it. We need make no words about it. And then I want you to take this horse and drive over the hill to that little ceme tery you can just see up there, and find where they have laid me. Then (non-sense, boy, I know what I am talking about)—I want you to sit down on the mound that covers me and whistle. Whistle the hymns and songs, the airs from the operas and the songs of the street, any and all of them—'

"I expostulated with him, referred him to his perfect health and tried to laugh away his morbid fancy, but it would not do. In a minute I had promised and his hand had closed over mine with the earnest: "Thank you, lad, thank you. I shall hear you!"

The women drew their wraps a little closer, and one of the men said, nervously:

"Denced uncomfortable statement!"

KINDNESS.

On the brow of the cloud, portentous and dread;
It comes like the daybreak of God's blessed light, when the night has been long and tears have been abed.

Tis the song and refrain that the glad angels sang when I remembered my promise at our last meeting. I frankly own that I tried to get out of it, but taking the horse I drove out to his pleasant home, just on the edge of town. His widow greeted me very kindly and I at once made known my errand, which was to secure her consent to the canceling of my rashly-made agreement. To my surprise she held me to its fulfillment.

All those and dury other comparing Nervine Tonic, NERVOUS DISEASES. As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine-tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow, and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied; and a thousand weaknesses and ailments, disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repairthe wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This South American Nervine has been found by analysis to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its universal adaptability to the cure of all forms of nervous de-Tangement.

To the Great South American Medicine Co.

Dean Gents:—I desiro to say to you that I have suffered for many years with a very serious disease of the s. omach and nerves. I tried every medicine I could hear of, but nothing done me any appreciable good until I was advised to try your Great South American Nervine Tonic and Stomach and Liver Cure, and since using several bottles of it I must say that I am surprised at its wonderful powers to cure the stomach and general nervot a system. If everyone knew the value of this remedy as I do you would not be able to supply the demand.
