The scheme was presented by Col. Mc-Naught and Mr. Scott. Mr. Chamber-lain held that the winter navigation of the St. Lawrence was useless without winter navigation of the upper lakes. He was satisfied that the navigation of the latter was quite feasible. He saw no physical difficulties of the lake navigation all winter, but doubted if it could be made to pay.

The prime minister, in his reply, said that two deputations had already waited on the government in this same connec-tion, but that the ministry could give them no definite answer till further details were given and it was known how much the experiments would cost.

The deputation had another scheme to present perhaps, of even larger magnitude. This was for a government bonus of $6,400 a mile to a new trans-continental railway from Quebec to Port Simpson, on the Pacific coast. It was explained that a company was ready to revive a charter for this road in 1895 and that the promoters were already promised encouragement fom the Ontario and Quebec governments.

The premier promised taking this scheme to the attention of his colleagues. BY ACCLAMATION

John Connor, of Ottawa, is a brother, and John Connor, of Ottawa, is a brother, and had recently taken Robert on a trip to Ottawa, in the hope of improving his health, and while in upper Canada, the eminent physician, Sir William Hingston, had been consulted, who recommended his patient to take exercise and prescribed

On his return home, last Saturday night, Mr. Connor's condition was no better, indeed, his physical appearance, and languid manner became to his relatives, quite noticeable.

On Monday afternoon he left his home, leaving the family, partly in expectation that he was going to Halifax, but giving them reason to believe that before he boarded the train, he would return to the house. They never again saw him alive. The afternoon passed away, and the night with the continued absence of Mr. Connor. Early Monday evening the police had been notified, and commenced search. Yesterday morning the remains of Mr. Connor were found in the loft.
This afternoon at 2.30 o'clock at Mr. Connor's late home, Coroner Roberts and a jury which he has empanelled, will conduct an inquest. The proceedings will be as private as possible.

The tragic ending of Mr. Connor's life was heard with genuine regret throughout the city. His business relations with the old ropewalk, the Connors' Premium Company, and the Freeman, made him well known in commercial circles, and by all he was greatly esteemed.
