When the Federals entered upon the cam-paign of the present year their armies embodied something like 600,000 men. Of these nearly 200,000 were two years men, and there were somewhat more than 400,000 who had enlisted or had been drafted for three years of the war. In May the term of enlistment of all the other short term men had expired, and the few who had not found a death on the battle field had re-turned to their homes. Out of the 2 200,000 and more men who had enlisted for the war, but
