In six chapters we have elequent studies of the sufferings and martyrdoms of the great Catholic heroes of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries,—of the Seraph Martyrs of Assisi, who followed in the footsteps of their founder and realized the meaning of perfect joy. Friars Rich and Risby, John Forest, Father Heath and Arthur Bell, to mention but a few. In the next chapter we have a vivid description of the effects of the Reformation on the people at large:

Reading these pages, one sees what dreadful misery and evil was brought upon the poor of England by the national apostacy, and can cry with St. Paul of the Cross. "O England. England! Let us pray for England. It is now fifty years since I have prayed constantly for her conversion. Will God one day bring her back to the Faith? Let us pray and leave the rest to God."

It was Francis Thompson who wrote: "Grief is a matter of relativity: the sorrow should be estimated by its proportion to the sorrower; a gash is as peainful to one as an amputation to another. Pour a puddle into a thimble, or an Atlantic into Etna; both thimble and mountain overflow. Adult fools! would not the angels smile at our griefs, were not angels too wise to smile at them?" And that is the present writer's excuse for his love of fairy stories and school tales, which can be as true to life (if we only gread aright) and as realistic as the

Our youth should be encouraged to know and love them, and learn the lessons of fortitude, perseverance and high resolve.

The recency of the beatification of Joan of Arc should be the occasion of increased interest on the part of Catholics, in the thrilling story of her life. Readers of the True Witness were presented earlier in the year with the main details of her career, and in these columns we have noticed one or two volumes on the subject. In the St. Nicholas' Series (2s per vol.), which we are never tired of praising, is a handsomely illustrated biography entitled can be as true to life (if we only read aright) and as realistic as the most genuine piece of biography. We have not for a long time read We have not for a long time read a tale of school life with such pleasure as "The Boys of St. Batt's," by R. P. Garrold (Macdonald & Evans, price 2s 6d). Full of prightly interest and able character painting, the tale has its setting at a Catholic College, which among other excellences boasted a Natural History Society, and a menagerie. somely illustrated biography entitled "Blessed Jeanne d'Arc," by Mrs. Artony; then there is Mrs. Maxwell Scott's dainty little brochure to which we referred some months ago, and Lady Amabel Kerr's "Joan of Arr," which had the advances. Arc," which had the advantage of revision by Mr. Andrew Lang, is published by the Catholic Truth Society of London. Last but by no other excellences boasted a Natural History Society, and a menagerie. The interest of the story depends on the fortunes of one of the in-mates of this last—Pygmalion, a means least comes an attractive litmates of this last—rygmanion, a Belgian hare, whose proud possessor, Blessington, was leader of the more select of the St. Batt's boys, self-styled the "Set." "Blessed Joar, the Maid" (price 1s and 2s. 6d) by Mgr. Stapylton Barnes, M.A., frontispieced with a reproduction of an early seventh century picture in the Hotel de Ville at Rouen. The rev. writer shows a strong rown of a rearry price. (at first passive and in the end very active, to these was the "gang" which (duce McGinley) in cluded the less pretentious spirits of the school. The rivalry between these two parties led to serious consequences, in which the circumstances of the demise of Pygmalion were no small factor; there's an excellent fight, an exciting escanade shows a strong power of narrative, and presents the story in as interesting a manner as we have ever met with.

were no small factor; there's an excellent fight, an exciting escapade and much boyish fun, which all leads up to a happy issue. Humor and the whole book leaves a regret for noe's lost boyhood. We realize that education is not merely of books and study; boys help to form and finish one another's character, and in every school we have our Blessingtons and McGinleys. Those whose taste is for poetry of a high order, would do well to make acquaintance with the works of Francis Thompson (1859-1907) It has been prophesied that when he known, he will be read as much as any of the great poets, and with as deep an interest. Of the charms of his verse we spoken at great length in the past; the wealth of his imagery is tounding, and beauty of thought and expression, dazzling. Whilst alive, he was ever advocating the reunion of sanctity and song, the return of poetry to the sheltering hearth of the Catholic Church. And that is the meaning of his poetry. The From the same publishers comes a volume of different interest—"Heroes of the Faith" (price 2s.) by Dom Bede Camm, whose love of the English martyrs we need not here emphasize. His life-efforts seem directed to making their stories wider known, and his own sparkling enthusiasm glows on every page that he has written. The present book consists of conferences given to the good nuns of Perpetual Adoration of the Blessed Sacrament, whose convent stands only a few vards from the site of Tyburn Tree, and whose hourly prayer is for the conversion of England.

THE FIRST CHRISTMAS.

When we read o'er the story
Of the first Christmas morn,
When Christ the King of Glory,
A little Child was born,
Do we not often wonder how Nature
hailed the Child,
When entering to his temporal realm
the King, yet Babe most mild!

Do we wonder if the stormy wind His storms of Life foretold, His brutal death upon the Cross, His brutal death upon the Cross,
Which gained for us the fold,
Do we wonder in the rain did fall,
as did his tears for such
So many who ne'er think of him,
who did for them so much?

Maybe that when the God did come The fields were white with snow, Immaculate like the Queen of Heav-

Mother of all below Mother of all below
Or perhaps, when the sweetest Mary
Mother of God—our Queen
Into the world did give the Child,
the earth was bright and green.

Perhaps the fields were covered With flowers of color gay,

Fair prophets sweetly telling
Our night was turned to day.

However was the weather, our God
did surely come

And gave us through his Sacred
Heart, a life beyond the tomb.

Then, enter with the Shepherds. Then, enter with the Shephstas, Upon this Christmas morn, And with the Wise Men from afar, Praise, Christ, the God,—New-

Praise, Christ, the God,—New-Born,
And praise his Gentle Mother, who for out sake doth give, Her Infant Son unto this world, that we through Him may live.

CHRISTMAS TREASURES.

I court my treasures o'er with care:
The little toy that baby knew,
A little sock of faded hue,
A little lock of golden hair.

Long years ago this Christmas time My little one, my all to me, Sat robed in white upon my knee, And heard the merry Christmas heard the chime.

Tell me, my little golden-head, If Santa Claus should come tonight, shall he bring my baby What bright. What treasure for my boy?" I said.

And then he named the little toy, While in his honest, mournful eyes There came a look of sweet surprise That spoke his quiet, trustful joy.

And as he lisped his evening prayer, He asked the boon with childish

grace,
Then, toddling to the chimneyplace,
He hung his little stocking there.

That night, as the lengthening shadows crept,

I saw the white-winged angels come

With heavenly music to our home And kiss my darling as he slept.

They must have heard the baby prayer, r in the morn, with smiling

For in the morn, with smiling face,

He toddled to the chimney-place,
And found the little treasure there.

They came again one Christmas Tide That angel host so fair and white, And, singing all the Christmas

They lured my darling from my side A little sock, a little toy,
A little lock of golder hair,
The Christmas music on the air,
A watching for my baby boy.

But if again that angel train
And golden head come back to me
To bear me to eternity,
My watching will not be in vain.

A CHRISTMAS PRAYER.

Mary Mother, be good to him; Be kind to him that day— 'Twill be the only Christmas time That he has been away!

I promised him a world of toys
If he would only stay—
Sure, heaven's full of little boys
That sing and laugh and play.

But you would know the smile

Among a thousand more; His smile will make all else se dim

When you call him "Asthore." Sure, you will know him by his eyes.

That are so sweet and blue,
And deep and clear and very w
They read the heart or you.
His hair is golden as the sun;
His curls they are so quaint
They mind you of the halo on
An angel or a saint.

I promised him a splendid tree, With candles, all aglow. Oh. Mary Mother, you can see "Twas me that loved him so. And surely, surely you will see My boy so sweet and slim— His eyes are hungering for me As my eyes are for him.

The Basilica of St. Mary Major, at Rome, is one of the most celebrated shrines in the world. It is most-renowned because of the mira-cle of the snow, which is annually commemorated on the day of the commemorated on the day of the founding of the Basilica by a pontifical high mass in Borghese Chapel, when at the offertory showers of snowy rose leaves are scattered from the dome on the marble floor beneath, until this is covered with a fragrant summer snowfall, pure and spotless as the miraculous snow a fragrant summer snowfall, pure and spotless as the miraculous snow by whose means Our Lady vouch-safed to designate the site for her church on that burning August day of A. D. 352, and thus the Basilica came by its beautiful title of "Our Lady of the Snow."

In after times this church was added to and improved, and it was entirely rebuilt in the fifth century by Pope 'Sixtus III in commemoration of the Council of Ephesus. Century of the Council of Ephesus. Century after century various Pontiffs have enriched the grand basilica with stupendous works of art; for all that fairest in art was brought to Our Lady's feet, but it was left to the age of the "Renaissance" to place the costliest gems of decoration in its crown in the shape of the two splendid chapels, the "Borghese," and the "Sistine," which rise in stately beauty on either side of the apse. of the apse.

Again, even the people who are Again, even the people who are not much given to churchgoing at other times turn out at Santa Maria Maggiore; and all through Christmas afternoon the stately basilica re-echoes to the glad strains of music and the steady hum and ceasaless movement of a great of music and the steady hum and ceaseless movement of a great crowd, coming and going, passing, and repassing, looking at the church and listening to the vesper music; but one and all pausing to say a few prayers in the quiet chapel of the Blessed Sacramebt, where inclosed by the iron gates from the throng outside the Prisoner of Love is with us truly in His royal state. It is one of the most characteristic and thoroughly cosmopolitan crowds in Rome, that in Santa Marla Maggiore on Christmas Day, and all giore on Christmas Day, and all classes of society are represented, rich and poor, gentle and simple, prince and peasant, side by side: stangers from afar-off lands, near country people in Roman costume; priests and prelates, friars and sol-diers—literally "all sorte and condi-tions of men." and our native land is represented in the throng.

Inside, the church has the form of a true basilica, in its most pure and severe forms of architectural beauty, and the sensation of perfect harmony is the one which strikes the eye most on entering it; a marvelous thing as one realizes its proportions as the largest Church of our Lady in the World. It certainly has not take the control of the world. in the world. It certainly has no such glowing, triumphant beauty such floods of light and such splen dor of sparkling marbles as the Ba silicas of St. Peter, St. John Late ran and St. Paul Outside the Walls beauty but it possesses a solemnly rich magnificence of its own, and the Touchingly beautiful is the association, that in the largest church in the world, dedicated to our Blessed Mother, the relics of the crib of her Divine Child should be preserved; and our hearts turn with loving devotion to the spot where Mother and Son are alike honored in that the pahe of Bethlehem so near to our poor nature.
