"Genesis 11" a Spurious Chapter of Remote Persian Origin.

Over a hundred years ago the following so-called "Genesis 11" was used, says the Albany Journal, to puzzle biblical scholars, and today, were it read aloud in any mixed company, it is questionable if its fraudulent nature would be discovered, so beautifully is the spirit and language of the Old Testament imitated.

1. And it came to pass after these things that Abraham sat in the door of his tent about the going down of the sun. 2. And behold a man, bowed down with age, came from the way of the wilderness, leaning on his staff. 3. And Abraham arose and met him, and said unto him: Turn in, I pray thee, and wash thy feet, and tarry all night, and thou shalt arise early on the morrow and go thy way. 4. But the man said: Nay, for I will abide under this tree. 5. And Abraham pressed him greatly; so he turned, and they went into the tent, and Abraham baked unleavened bread, and they did eat. 6. And when Abraham saw that the man blessed him, he said unto him: Wherefore dost thou not worship the most high God, Creator of heaven and earth? 7. And the man answered and said: I do not worship the God thou speakest of; neither do I call upon his name; for I have made to myself a god, which abideth always in my house and provideth me with all things. 8. And Abraham's zeal was kindled against the man, and he arose and drove him forth with blows into the wilderness. 9. And at midnight God called unto Abraham, saying: Abraham, where is the stranger? 10. And Abraham answered and said: Lord he would not worship thee, neither would he call upon thy name, therefore have I driven him out from before my face into the wilderness. 11. And God said: Have I not borne with him these hundred and ninety and eight years, and nourished him, and clothed him, notwithstanding his rebellion against me, and couldst not with him, that art thyself a sinner, bear with him one night? 12. And Abraham said: Let not the anger of my Lord wax against his servant; lo! I have sinned, forgive me, I pray thee. 13. And Abraham arose and went forth into the wilderness and sought diligently for the man, and found him, and returned with him to the tent; and when he had entertained him kindly, he sent him away on the morrow with gifts. 14. And God spoke again unto Abraham, saying: For this thy sin shall thy seed be afflicted 4000 years in a strange land. 15. But for thy repentance will I deliver thee, and they shall come forth with power and with gladness of heart, and with much substance. 16. In 1759, when in England as agent for the colony of Pennsylvania, Benjamin Franklin privately printed this "chapter," as he always termed it. Taking it from a sheet of paper, he kept it laid flat on a table, and at the end of Genesis, and used to amuse himself by reading it aloud to his friends and hearing them express their surprise that they had never recollected reading it, and their openly expressed admiration of the moral it carried with it. Its origin is unknown. It has been traced back 700 years to a Persian poet who simply says "it was so related." It must be very old.

How to Cook Husbands

Miss Curson said in the Baltimore cooking school that a Baltimore lady had written a receipt for "cooking husbands so as to make them tender and good." It is as follows: A good many husbands are utterly spoiled by mismanagement. Some women go about it as if their husbands were bladders and blow them up. Others keep them in a stew by irritating words and ways. Others roast them. Some keep them in a pickle all their lives. It cannot be supposed that any husband will be tender and good, managed in this way, but they are really delicious when properly treated. In selecting your husband you should not be guided by the silvery appearance as in buying mackerel, nor by the golden tint as if you wanted salmon. Be sure and select him yourself, as tastes differ. Do not go to the market for him, as the best are always brought to your door. It is far better to have none unless you will patiently learn how to cook him. A preserving kettle of the finest porcelain is best, but if you have nothing but an earthenware pipkin it will do with care. See that the lichen in which you wrap him is nicely washed and mended, with the required number of buttons and strings nicely sewed on. Tie him in the kettle by a strong silk cord called comfort, as the one called duty is apt to be weak. They are apt to fly out of the kettle and be burned and crusted on the edges, like crabs and lobsters, you have to cook them while alive. Make a clear, steady fire out of love, neatness and cheerfulness. Set him as near this as seem to agree with him. If he sputters and fizzes do not be anxious; some husbands do this until they are quite done. Add a little sugar in the form of what confectioners call kisses, but no vinegar or pepper on any account. A little spice improves them, but it must be used with judgment. Do not stick any sharp instrument into him to see if he is becoming tender. Stir him gently; watch the while, lest he lie too flat and close to the kettle and so become useless. You cannot fail to know when he is done. If thus treated you will find him very digestible, agreeing nicely with you and the children, and he will keep as long as you want unless you become careless and set him in too cold a place.

LEPROSY IN LOUISIANA

"The New South" in Harper's Magazine for November.

Mr. Ely and the priest lodged in the house of one of the petits habitants. In the evening, when they were alone, the subject of leprosy came up. "We hear at the North," said Mr. Ely, "vague accounts of the Terre des Lepreux, which is said to be somewhat in Louisiana. What truth is there in them?"

"They are no doubt greatly exaggerated," said Father Nedaud. "A spurious leprosy, elephantiasis, was so common among the negroes under the Spanish domination that Governor Miro founded a hospital for lepers near New Orleans, on the Bayou St. John. It has been gone these many years, and Leper's Land is now built up with pretty houses. The disease is extinct, then?"

"There were some cases of it in this parish, about twenty years ago. An old creole lady was the first. Her father doubtless brought the terrible taint in his blood from France. When the white seal appeared in her face her husband and family fled from her. There was a young girl, daughter of M. le Duc, who went to her and nursed her alone during the three years in which she fought with death. Another of M. le Duc's servants, a man of this old woman's children, who deserted, became leper. The young girl who had nursed her, after she died married a little fermier, and lived happily in her little cabin with her husband and pretty baby. But one day a shining white spot appeared on her forehead. That was the end."

"She died?"

"Yes, after four years. There is no cure. It surely does not matter to her now by what road God called her to Him. There have been since then no lepers in this parish except in these tainted families. The real Terre des Lepreux in Louisiana is now on the lower Lafourche, below Harang's Canal. The bayou there is turbid and foul; it flows through malarious swamps lower than itself. The creole planters there are honest and temperate folk, but they are wretchedly poor. They raise only rice, and live on it and fish. The wet rice fields come up to the very doors of their cabins. The leprosy which certain families among them have inherited is developed by these conditions. Five years ago Professor Joseph Jones president of the State Board of Health, went himself with his son to explore theypress swamps and lagoons of the lower Lafourche. He says, it is the region of the shadow of death. He found many poor lepers hiding there. They were as dead men who walk and talk. They could handle burning coals; they felt no longer cold, nor heat, nor pain. Their bodies were as corpses. One man lived alone in a hut, thatched with palm-branches, which he had built for himself, eating only the rice which he had planted. No man nor woman had come near him for years. The Terre des Lepreux extends as far as Cheniere Caminada, where the bayou empties into the Gulf."

Mr. Ely remained silent, though a torrent of angry queries rushed to his lips. Why was nothing done to mitigate the horrors of such life-in-death? How could this priest, a man of God, so calmly discuss these poor accursed creatures from his safe, comfortable point of vantage, joggling on his easy-going mare from one farm to another? He bade him presently rather curt good-night, and went to the loft where he was to sleep. When he came down in the morning, Pere Nedaud had gone.

"M. sieu," said his smiling host, "le pere haf le' you bon-matin," waving his hand to the black figure far across the parlor.

"Where is his charge now?"

"M. sieu—" Gaspar paused a moment. "In hell, I think. It is near Cheninada, in la Terre des Lepreux."

Mr. Ely walked away from him, and paced up and down the levees for a long time.

"God forgive me!" he muttered to himself.

The Contents of a Bustle.

Mrs. Martin, a Cincinnati dressmaker, attracted attention in the New York Custom house by her somewhat profane and turbulent, and an inspection was determined upon. In the bustle was found twenty-four pieces of time-binding, five pieces of black lace, five point lace collars, fifty-four pieces of silk binding, twelve pieces of water-silk ribbon, six jet bead ornaments, a box of perfumery, a silver watch, two pairs of bracelets, a pair of toilet ornaments, a dozen packages of French books and eyes, one dress pattern embroidered in linen on silk, thirty yards of lined embroidered silk crape, and a black silk dress skirt.

Good Cause for Alarm.

Occasionally the servant has really reason to find fault. A man appeared at an intelligence office the other day and engaged a girl for general housework. "Have you any children?" asked the maid before she closed the bargain. "Only a few," he replied, and she took this to mean two or three. She arrived at the house just at breakfast time the next morning and was surprised to see nine little ones fling into the dining-room. "Are there any more?" she gasped. "Well, yes," answered the proud father, "there are the twins, who cannot walk yet, and the baby." The girl did not stop to unpack her trunk.

News comes of the Lady Brassey's death on board the yacht Sunbeam on the way to Australia, and her burial at sea. It is a death and burial not unbecomingly fitting this cheerful, courageous English woman, who has been the companion of her husband, Sir Thomas Brassey, on so many voyages, and has written such delightful books about them. She loved the sea, and was as good a yachtsman as her husband, and capable of heroism in little things and large, as she often showed.

"Does a rat smell like whiskey?" "No, dear; why do you ask?" "Last night when papa talked a little funny, I smelt whiskey, and you said 'you smelt a rat.'"

A GIRL IN PRISON FOR LIFE

She Killed her Father, Who Had Whipped her for Not Going to Church.

Trenton, Ga., Nov. 1.—There is a girl named Leila Burgess serving a life term in the Dade county coal mines, the story of whose crime is somewhat strange. Her father, James Burgess, lived near Martin, in the western part of the State. He had two daughters, the youngest of whom was Leila. About three years ago he joined the church, and became a regular church attendant. He was pained to see that his two daughters, now grown to young womanhood, did not care to attend the religious services with the regularity that he did, and where all should have been concerned the bitterest kind of discord grew up. After a while Burgess told the girls that a revival was about to open, and that he expected them to attend every service, and if they did not there would be somebody to whip. For three mornings the girls failed to appear at the "sunrise" meetings. On the fourth morning Burgess pulled the girls out of bed and began to chastise one of them severely. When he had beaten her into submission he began on the other. Leila, who was the first one chastised, slipped out of the room, procured an axe, and with one stroke buried the edge of it in her father's skull. The gash was five inches long and penetrated the brain half an inch. Afterward the girl sat looking sullenly at the dead body of her father, oblivious of the scene which pressed in to behold the scene of blood. She was convicted of the highest grade of manslaughter, and took her place among the convicts uncomplainingly, merely saying that she would commit the crime over again before she would be compelled to go to church so early in the morning.

Tobacco and the Heart.

Dr. Franzel, of Berlin, reporting on the effects of immoderate smoking upon the heart, says that smoking, as a rule, agrees with persons for many years, although by degrees cigars of a finer flavor are chosen. But all at once, without any assignable cause, troubles are experienced with the heart, which compels the calling in of the doctor. Common cigars are not so liable to produce these effects as the finer flavored ones. Nor can the charge be laid upon cigarettes, although they produce evils of their own. The troubles seldom begin till after the smoker is over 30 years of age, and he usually attacks him at between 50 and 60. While it has not been determined what it is that makes smoking injurious, it appears certain that the effect does not depend upon the amount of nicotine.

No Harm to Talk About It.

It is just as well that the important question of Commercial Union should be discussed so that it may be brought before the public opinion in case it should ever be under the necessity of judging of it. Until now no political party has put this question on its programme. It remains in the domain of free discussion. However, if the project was adopted, it would have a capital importance inasmuch as it would completely change our commercial relations with the United States, and we know these relations represent an enormous capital. — De Journal de Quebec.

Grip cleverly cartoons Sir Tupper as Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. As Dr. Jekyll he sits proudly on the back of the temperance hog, holding the whole of it, while as Mr. Hyde he stands in a maudlin condition beside a hoghead, and he is going the whole of that too. The cartoon is suggested by his temperance professions as contrasted with the liquor bills for his palace in London.
