Primitive Labor.

At its best labor in primitive times was but a form of slavery, the nations of Northern Europe being accustomed to the notion, chiefly owing to their associations with the Southern countries where market slavery was an institution. The German tribes, borrowing from the Romans, with whom they not infrequently fought, introduced the custom or system of making use of captives taken in war: men guilty of crimes against the state (one which is in vogue in every civilized country at the present day), debtors, and those who by invertebrate gambling had wasted their substance, often took the hazard of their personal liberty, and staked their bodies on the throw, becoming, if the losers, the slaves of their lucky opponents. Such forced labor could have but one termination—slavery—subjection of body and mind to the will of the master, and so slavery grew into national life and became legally recognized. The little information that we have of life in other parts of Europe beside those mentioned, in early times, give the same accounts of conditions and the essential features of the quality of slavery arising out of these, are discernible. Changes of time and the increase of the area of geographical observation brought slavery into greater prominence, and the abomination not only flourished and thrived for centuries after the introduction of the Christian era, but was long regarded as not inconsistent with the doctrines of Christianity, and became recognized, even in civilized Europe as a national institution, and laws were passed for its protection. The master farmed out his slaves or serfs, and received their earnings, when not employed at his own work, and this custom became an absolute right, and, apart from any contract, it was generally accepted that the person of the laborer was at the disposal of his lord, who held authority in all matters affecting his life, and could impose upon him sentence of death for disobedience.

Slave labor was common throughout the known world from the remotest ages, and some of its permanent handicrafts are the wonders of this present age of machinery and progress. Such monuments as the pyramids of Egypt and the Great Wall of China attest to the durability of man's constructiveness, and these were erected by the hands of slaves. The classic temples of Athens and Rome, the ruins of which are the admiration of all who behold them, were built by slaves. The walls and hanging gardens of Babylon testify to the ability of forced labor, and many other stupendous structures in the old world amply demonstrate the skill of both architect and laborer. In Britain, the Druidical temples of Stonehenge and Avebury were, without doubt, put up by slave labor. In the Americas,

North and South, long ere Columbus landed at San Salvador, or Cortes conquered Mexico or that other Spanish conquistador Pizarro subjugated Peru, slavery existed. The wonderful teocalli, so ably described by Prescott the historian, upon the roofs of which Aztec and Incas worshipped and sacrificed to, the rising sun were, laid by slaves. In India, China and other Oriental countries slavery was recognized and protected, men being counted wealthy according to the inventory of their human property. For years the English colonies in North America made slavery an industry and armed ships were sent to Africa for the purpose of forcibly taking the natives from their villages for work on the plantations, the owners and purveyors of such ventures making large sums of money out of the sale of the human live stock brought back. Many of these "black birders" supplied the Spanish West India possessions, and a regular trade in human flesh was established and carried on with profit, until Great Britain took the lead and after abolishing slavery in her own dominions, declared against all such trading and trafficking as being contrary to divine and human law, and used all her influence to have the other powers join with her in the new crusade for the emancipation of the chained slaves of the 19th century, whose condition was far worse than the human chattels of barbaric times.

Bishop & Sons, Ltd.,
New Department.

The Telegram reporter had the pleasure yesterday afternoon of being shown through the splendid new Gents' Furnishings' Department of Bishop & Sons' Water Street departmental store. This department, which is in the store lately occupied by Mr. Jesse Whiteaway, has been fitted up with the most modern and convenient combinations, and upon entering one is very favorably impressed with the brilliancy of the department. A polished floor, bright and artistic decoration, and large glare-free electric lights lend this pleasing effect of the modern store. Handsome grey-oak finish cabinets and show-cases contain the new line of goods displayed for sale. These cases, which are so situated as to be most easily reached, contain glass doors which slide on wheels at the bottom, ensuring the minimum of time in opening the case. In them are kept young men's suits, each and every, each kind occupying its own case. Needless to state, the dresses are dust-proof. The caps and dress-shirts are assorted according to size and quality, the winter and summer ones being separated. In conjunction with the store is a changing room, where clothing may be fitted with the certainty of complete privacy. Large full-sized mirrors greatly facilitate this. In the rear of the department is situated a shoe and rubber counter, with handsome and comfortable seats and other facilities at hand. Without doubt this new department of Bishop & Sons is the latest and most up-to-date in the city, and that the custom that such a splendid store warrants will always be forthcoming, is our hope.

Obituary.

ALEXANDER MOORE.
Mr. Alexander Moore, who sustained injuries some time ago at the Royal Gazette Bldg., died yesterday evening at the General Hospital. Death was principally due to pneumonia. Mr. Moore was one of the most widely known printers in St. John's, and worked for about 40 years on the "Royal Gazette." He was a very amiable citizen, and a member of the Grand Lodge of the Society of United Fishermen. He leaves to mourn a widow, three sons and three daughters. The Telegram extends sympathy to the bereaved.

AVIATION.
The Conquest of the Air.

(Specially Written for the Telegram.)
An attempt will be made shortly to cross the Atlantic by air. In this simple phrase is announced an endeavour surrounded by difficulties, which one unacquainted with aviation, cannot possibly realize. Throughout the war there has been a phenomenal development of flying, along fighting lines and now that the war is over the aeroplane is going to justify its existence as an aid to the peaceful progress of humanity. Foremost amongst the conquests to be made is that of the Atlantic, and the men who have given England her aerial supremacy on the Western front will not be found wanting in the exceptional genius, courage and organizing abilities requisite for this venture. To fly nearly 2,000 miles across the ocean out of sight of land! It hardly sounds the wonder that it is. So rapid has been the progress of aircraft that the general public have come to regard its marvels as a matter of course. But think of the problems to be faced, the difficulties to be overcome before the first flight is an accomplished fact! In the first place a machine has to be designed which can maintain a speed of about 100 miles per hour while carrying fuel for the journey, the pilot and at least one passenger. At the same time it has to maintain a standard of accuracy such as never before has been dreamt of. To produce such a machine is the work of a genius, requiring broadness of mind, boldness of conception and a scrupulous attention to the minutest detail. Secondly a man has to be found to make the venture, a man of courage, a man of skill, a man with unusual powers of endurance, one who is willing to risk his life that the world may be the finer for others to live in. Thirdly the machine has to be navigated. The Atlantic Ocean is a vast waste of water, there is no asking the way, knowledge alone will not do. Men have been navigating ships for hundreds of years, but it is only in the last year or two that any serious attention has been given to the difficult problem of finding your way in the air out of sight of land. Numerous obstacles which are non-existent on board a ship, are met by an aeroplane. To state two alone: an aeroplane does not fly steady for long at a time and to one in it is impossible to say whether it is steady or not, also it is no easy matter to see your horizon when at 5,000 feet, and this is essential for navigation, by sun or stars. But the brains of the Anglo-Saxon race will overcome this difficulty, even as its hereditary daring will find the pilot. A fourth and most serious hindrance still remains in the weather. We can improve machines and improve navigation, but we cannot improve the weather. We can only stand it with all the aid that ingenuity and science can place at our disposal. The Atlantic is so large that two or three great storms can exist right on the pilot's route without any signs of them showing any where on land. However, this question is receiving considerable attention and an officer of the Royal Air Force is now here in St. John's making arrangements so that he will be able to inform the pilot of the exact conditions he will meet and advise him when they are suitable. To carry out this project, the greatest ever attempted of its kind, he will have to be in daily touch with the weather throughout the whole of America, Europe and with numerous ships in the Atlantic. And what of the flight when it is done, and what of the men who did it? This adventure will open up wide vistas of commercial prosperity and accuracy such as never before has been dreamt of. To produce such a machine is the work of a genius, requiring broadness of mind, boldness of conception and a scrupulous attention to the minutest detail. Secondly a man has to be found to make the venture, a man of courage, a man of skill, a man with unusual powers of endurance, one who is willing to risk his life that the world may be the finer for others to live in. Thirdly the machine has to be navigated. The Atlantic Ocean is a vast waste of water, there is no asking the way, knowledge alone will not do. A message to the Minister of Marine from Fisheries from S. Sable I. says "Dense fog; crew all on board and well."

Commendable.

We are glad to note the promptitude with which the Council cleaned the unsightly scene facing Water St., commenced in Thursday's Evening Telegram. We note too the decision of the Council to clean the streets in general, and we would emphasize that preliminary cleaning, at least, is a necessity, if we wish to counteract against another epidemic. We have no doubt but that the streets will be cleaned with the same speed that characterized the cleaning of the portion earlier referred to.

MINERS REPRESENTIVES CONFERENCE.
LONDON, Mar. 22.
One hundred and fifty delegates representing the Miners of the United Kingdom, met this morning to discuss the interim report of the Commission, of which Justice John Sankey is Chairman, issued last night, and decided as to whether there would be a strike or peace in the mining industry. The conference met without any recommendation from the executive officers of the Miners' Union. Before the meeting the key report, which recommended an hour of work underground for miners instead of eight, from 12th inst., and six hours from 13th, 1921, subject to the economic conditions of the industry, with increase in wages of two shillings shift for colliery workers, now upon the sliding scale, and an advance of one shilling for workers under 18 years. An effective voice in the direction of the mines for the miners was recommended. The substitution of the National Arbitration or Conciliation by National Arbitration or Conciliation, for the present system of ownership and system of working.

ANOTHER APPLICANT.
LONDON, Mar. 22.
German-Austria has expressed a desire for independent representation at the Peace Conference, according to Berlin advices reaching here.

GERMAN SEAMEN REFUSE.
LONDON, Mar. 22.
A Central News despatch from Amsterdam says, German seamen in Hamburg have decided that they will not man ships carrying English troops.

GRAVE SITUATION IN EGYPT.
LONDON, Mar. 22.
The situation in Egypt is becoming worse, and at the present time is distinctly grave, a Reuters despatch from Cairo says. General Allenby, Commander in Palestine, will reach Cairo Tuesday. The large force of troops already in Egypt are being reinforced.

THE CONFERENCE HAS THE WORD.
PARIS, Mar. 22.
"The first result to be obtained Peace, and the quickest peace possible," said David Lloyd George, British Premier, in a statement published in to-day's issue of the "Excelsior." All internal events in every country allied or enemy," continued Premier are dependent on that Peace which we expect and desire to obtain at the earliest possible moment. It is this everyone is living in a state of expectation and uncertainty. Commerce and industry are kept in a kind of stagnation, which can engender disorders. I shall therefore remain in Paris, unless something unexpected arises, until the text of the Peace Preliminaries are definitively drafted, and ready for submission.
