

JIM HAS FARTHER DANGER AND EXCITING ADVENTURES.

Amused and annoyed as Jim was at the position in which he was placed, he yet could not avoid laughing at the ludicrousness of the whole business—at the queer figure he cut in his Indian costume, and in the copper hue which had been given to his complexion by the dye which had been so carefully rubbed over his body.

Regarding the latter, he lost no opportunity, when alone, of industriously washing those portions of his frame which were covered, in efforts to remove it, his anxiety being lest, if it got sufficient time to dry, it would become indelible. His success was by no means so great as he desired. The rubbings and washings made the redness paler, but they by no means removed it, and, of course, he durst not operate on his hands, his face, and those portions of his body which were exposed—portions, by the way, much more numerous and extensive than suited his English notions of modesty and decorum. But what could he do? Now that he was made an Indian, and was looked on as such by the party he was accompanying, he must conform to the usages of his "tribe," or be looked on with suspicion and watched with incessant care, and it was Jim's special interest to subdue all suspicion in the minds of the savages, else he would never be able to make his escape.

With a wonderfully good grace, therefore, and with the aspect of one who was not only satisfied but delighted with his position, Jim unhesitatingly adopted the Indian ways, and many a time had he inward laugh at his strange fantastic appearance, and the curious things he required to do.

"Good gracious!" he would say to himself, as he swaggered about under the trees, "wot would Master Philip say if he saw me now? Or if he saw me in the street, or in the middle of a Regatta? My eye! if Sally Purpess got but one glimpse of my visage she'd scream and run and never look at me again. Heigh-ho! shall I ever see Sally again, or get back to civilized society? Or is it to be my fate to remain all the rest of my life among these savages? Goodness gracious me, the thought is frightful, and if I don't manage to bolt at once every mile we go makes the chance less."

This soliloquy was uttered by Jim towards the close of the following day, when, as the shadows of evening drew on, the party sought about for a suitable place to encamp for the night. They had journeyed all that day, and had now reached the banks of a river not very broad, but strong in its current, as was evident by the quickness with which an occasional reed floated past.

It was along the wooden shore of the stream they were now progressing in search of a glade or open place whereon to pitch their tents. Utter solitude reigned around them, for they were far in the depths of the primeval forest, and the darkly-flowing river rolled its waters through a scene which, perchance, no human eye but an Indian's had ever beheld—where none but moss-covered feet had ever trod, and even they but seldom. Few minutes had passed since Jim indulged in these thoughts—partly sad, partly humorous—when in passing the edge of a narrow creek, he observed a canoe lying under a low, overhanging bank—one solitary canoe, which seemed to be for the time deserted, for no one was near it. With a start which he could not suppress, Jim glanced around to see if any of the others had seen it. There was no sign that they had, and he fervently hoped the party would pass the spot without the canoe catching their attention.

Under the fervour of his wish and the intensity of his feelings he hardly breathed till the little creek was left behind, and so far as he could judge the canoe had not been perceived.

How Jim's heart bounded and throbbed. Here was a chance, if he could have an opportunity of seizing it, and the very hope it engendered threatened to betray itself by his trembling excitement. He retained, however, sufficient self-possession to take hold of a peculiarly shaped rock which marked the spot, and which would guide him readily to the place when the moment of action came.

It was nearly quarter of a mile further ere they came to an opening in the forest suitable for encamping, and here at length, weary with the day's wanderings, the Indians sought repose till morning.

Sleep was of course what Jim carefully eschewed, though equally, of course, he pretend to court it with as great avidity as the rest, who, after gorging themselves with food, laid themselves down at the foot of the trees or under the rude awnings which they erected, and most of them were ere long sunk in slumber.

Jim's adopted mother was the last to lose her wakefulness. With an affectionate solicitude, which he would much rather have wanted, she seated herself near to where he lay, and crooned over him with melancholy monotony what was intended for a soothing lullaby—a proceeding which he endeavored to show her was altogether unnecessary, by giving vent to a succession of stentorian snores. This ruse, however, he found in vain, for there she sat, rocking her withered body to and fro, and persisting in repeating in the Indian tongue—the few and set words of her unmusical dirge.

BREAKFAST.—EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills.—Civil Service Gazette. Made simply with Boiling Water or Milk. Each packet is labelled—"Laxer Epps & Co., Homeopathic Chemists, London."

To Cure a Cough, to relieve all irritations of the throat, to restore perfect soundness and health to the most delicate organizations of the human frame—the Lungs—use Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, which is still prepared with the same care in the selection and compounding of its various ingredients as when it was introduced to the public by Dr. Wistar, over forty years since.

MANUFACTURE OF COCOA.—We will now give an account of the process adopted by Messrs. James Epps & Co., manufacturers of dietetic articles, at their works in the Euston Road, London.—See article in Cassell's Household Guide. J206mdw

The Twelfth was celebrated in Meaford by a procession, in which all the lodges of St. Vincent District took part. After dinner the lodges marched to the grove on Frowbridge Street and were addressed by Rev. Messrs. Anderson, Sanderson and Wilkinson, and by Mr. R. McKnight.—Meaford Monitor.

THE Genuine Thing!
10 per cent. off for Cash
 As Mr. STEWART is leaving for the British and Continental Markets in July, he has determined to reduce his large stock of Dry Goods and Clothing by $20,000 this month. To effect this he has resolved to allow a discount of 10 per cent. on all purchases of $1 and upwards. So rare a chance of securing cheap goods seldom occurring, the public should avail themselves of making and saving money. Quotations of prices being no real criterion of cheapness, an inspection of goods is solicited.

WILLIAM STEWART.
 N.B.—A lot of Dress Goods slightly damaged by water from a leak in the roof will be offered at less than half price.
 Cottons will be sold at the Genuine Cost—and are exempted from the 10 per cent. reduction.
