Provincial Health Secretary's Report to Mr. Mowat

System in Vogue at the Asylum.

Provincial Board of Health, Toronto, Sept. 1, 1890.

Dear Sir.—I have the honor to a knowledge the receipt of a file of papers i the Queen vs. the city of London in matter of a nuisance in the River Thame
I have carefully reviewed the correspond ence and noted the statements pro am con.

with the different phases of this vereing question.

Under section 64 of the Public Health Act, the Board was called upon to investigate the matter in 1885, and after a careful and thorough examination into the whole matter on the ground by Dr. Oldright and Professor Galbraith, the Board adopted their report, which stated that there were good grounds for the complaints, and urging that the city be prevented from continuing to pollute the stream. The urging that the city be prevented free continuing to pollute the stream. To evidence before the court was along withat of other witnesses deemed conclusiby the judge, and he gave judgement sordingly. The matter was appealed, as so has stood till the action was taken Chapman.

As the Public Health Act makes express shound they Simcoe. Manifestly, therefore, if this desirable work of preventing the pollution of natural watercourses is to progress, the Board can have but one opinion regarding the most notorious instance of it in the Province— notorious instance of it in the Province—

The argument of the defense refers to the Thames as "that natural stream which had been provided for the purpose of carrying off all drainage and sewage," whereas it must constantly be remembered that the stream in question has to be looked to for supplying water to all the towns situated upon its banks, in case they find no better source.

must constantly be remembered that the stream in question has to be looked to for supplying water to all the towns situated upon its banks, in case they find no better source.

Soveral schemes have been proposed by the city for remedying the evil, such as placing milk of lime in the main sewer near its outfall; and, as seen from the Engineer's letter, they are now trying a similar scheme, viz. the Conder (system for precipitating sewage. But from the fact stated you will see that all fail completely in purifying the river, since the lowering of the water left the river bed a mass of putrescent sewage, made worse by the sluggish water of the mill-dam. Such methods must fail, because even though they precipitate the sewage it only passes into the river to there putrefy. What they must do if they wish to use chemicals, is to have, as I have often told them, settling tanks, and thereafter arrangements for carrying the clear affluence away, and from time to time emptying the tanks of sludge. Our committee recommended carrying down the sewage a mile or two to the flats, and there on grounds which are most favorable to establish a sewage farm or proper precipitation tanks. They have persistently refused, however, to take steps in any way equal to the emergency.

I have from time to time carefully inspected, have made analysis of the soil, the subsoil and the water therefrom, of the new sewage farm at the London Asylum during a whole year, and I am pleased to be able to say in accordance with the oninion of Mr. Horetsky, of the Public Works Department, and the Asylum officials, that the farm is in every way a perfect success. I have told Londoners to go and learn from that what can be done, and I see no reason why they should be in any way relieved from the pressure which the law has laid upon them.

As the amount of sewage will increase, and the river is decreasing in volume, and as towns below will require to draw upon it for their water supply, therefore, with the most favorable opportunities for a sewage farm, and
