. "Turn to the Right.

I started impetuously from my stool under the influence of the emotion which this thought naturally aroused, and seized M, d'Agen by the arm. "What has happened?" I exclaimed. "Is it Bruhi? Didhe break into my lodgings last night? What!" I continued, staggering back as I read the confirmation of my fears in his face. "He did?"

face. "He did?"
M. d'Agen, who had risen also, pressed my hand with convulsive energy. Gazing into my face, he held me a moment thus embraced, his manner a strange mixture of found there, you understand! But M. de Rambouillet is on his way here, and in a few minutes you will be free. We will follow together. If we overtake them

-well. If not, it will be time to talk.

He broke off, and I stood looking at him, stunned by the blow, yet in the midst of my own horror and surprise retaining sense enough to wonder at the gloom on his brow the passion which trembled in his words. What had this to do with him?
"But Bruhl?" I said at last, recovering myself with an effort-"how did he gain access to the room? I left it guarded." By a ruse, while Maignan and his men were away," was the answer. "Only this lad of yours was there. Bruhl's men over-"Which way has Bruhl gone?" I muttered, my throat dry, my heart beating wildly. He shook his head: "All we know is that he passed through the south gate with eleven horsemen, two women, and six led horses, at daybreak this morning," he an-"Maignan came to my uncle with the news, and M. de Rambouillet went at onee, early as it was, to the king to procure your release. He should be here now.'

I looked at the barred window, the most horrible fears at my heart; from it to Simon Fleix, who stood beside it, his attitude expressing the utmost dejection. I went towards him. "You hound!" I said in a low voice, "how did it happen?"

To my surprise he fell in a moment on his knees, and raised his arm as though to ward off a blow. "They imitated Maignan's voice," he muttered hoarsely. We opened." "And you dare to come here and tell me!" I cried, scarcely retaining my passion. "You, to whom I have intrusted ner. You, whom I thought devoted to her. You have destroyed her, man!"

He rose as suddenly as he had cowered down. His thin, nervous face underwent a startling change; growing on a sudden hard and rigid, while his eyes began to glitter with excitement. "I have destroyed her? Ay, mon Dieu! I have," he cried, speaking to my face, and no longer flinching or avoiding my eye. "You may kill me, if you like. You do not know all. It was I who stole the favor she gave you from your doublet, and then said M. de Rosny had taken it! It was I who told her you had given it away! It was I who brought her to the Little Sisters', that she might see you with Madame de Bruhl! It was I who did all, and destroyed her! Now you know! Do with me what you like!"

He opened his arms as though to receive a blow, while I stood before him astounded beyond measure by a disclosure so unexpected: full of righteous wrath and indignation, and yet uncertain what I ought to do. Did you also let Bruhl into the room on purpose?" I cried at last.

"I?" he exclaimed, with a sudden flash of rage in his eyes. "I would have died I do not know how I might have "taken was a trampling of horses outside, and before I could answer him I heard M. de Rambouillet speaking in haughty tones, at the below. The Provost-Marshal was with him, but his lower notes were lost in wing of bridles and the stamping of impatient hoofs. I looked towards the door of my room, which stood ajar, and presently the two entered, the marquis listening with an air of extreme indifference to the apologies which the other, who attended at his elbow, was pouring forth. M. de Rambouillet's face reflected none of the gloom and despondency which M. d'Agen's exhibited in so marked a degree, He seemed, on the contrary, full of gaiety and good-humor, and, coming forward and seeing me, embraced me with the utmost kindness and condescension.

'Ha! my friend," he said cheerfully, "so I find you here after all! But never fear. I am this moment from the king with an order for your release. His Majesty has told me all, making me thereby your lasting friend and debter. As for this gentle-man," he continued, turning with a cold smile to the Provost-Marshal who seemed to be trembling in his boots, "he may expect an immediate order also. M. de Villequier has wisely gone a-hunting, and will not be back for a day or two."

Racked as I was by suspense and anxiety, I could not assail him with immediate petitions. It behooved me first to thank him for his prompt intervention, and this in terms as warm as I could invent. Nor could I in justice fail to commend the Provost to him, representing the officer's conduct to me, and lauding his ability. All this, though my heart was sick with thought and fear and disappointment, and every minute seemed an age. "Well, well," the Marquis said with stately good-nature, "we will lay the blame on Villequier then. He is an old fox, however, and ten to one he will go scot-free. It is not the first time he has played this trick. But I have not yet come to the end of my commission," he continued pleasantly. "His Majesty sends you this, M. de Marsac, and bade me say that he had loaded it for you."

He drew from under his cloak as he spoke the pistol which I had left with the king, and which happened to be the same M. de losny had given me. I took it, marveling patiently at the careful manner in which he handled it; but in a moment I under-stood, for I found it loaded to the muzzle with gold-pieces, of which two or three fell and rolled upon the floor. Much moved by this substantial mark of the king's gratitude, I was nevertheless for pocketing them in haste; but the Marquis, to satisfy a little curiosity on his part, would have me count them, and brought the tale to a little over 2,000 livres, without counting a ring set with recious stones which I found among them. This handsome present diverted my thoughts from Simon Fleix, but could not relieve the anxiety I felt on mademoiselle's account. The thought of her position so tertured me that M. de Rambouillet began to perceive my state of mind, and hastened to assure me that before going to the Court he had already issued orders calculated to

"You desire to follow this lady, I understand?" he said. "What with the king, who is enraged beyond the ordinary by this outrage, and Francois there, who seemed beside himself when he heard the news, I have not got any very clear idea; of the "She was intrusted to me by-by one, sir, well known to you," I answered hoarsely. "My honor is engaged to him and to her. If I follow on my feet and alone, I must follow. If I cannot save her I can at least punish the villains who have wronged her.' "But the man's wife is with them," he said in some wonder,

"That goes for nothing," I answered. He saw the strong emotion under which I labored, and which scarcely suffered me to answer him with patience; and he looked at me curiously but not unkindly. "The sooner you are off, the better then," he said, nodding. "I gathered as much. The man Maignan will have his fellows at the south gate an hour before noon, I understand. With yourself and the lad there you

"Alas, yes," he answered, "he did, and took away those whom he found there! Those whom he should overtake them some time this evening if your horses are in condition.

I thanked him warmly, without regarding his kindly statement that my conduct on the previous day had laid him under lasting obligations to me. We went down together, and he transferred to of his fellows to me there and then, bidding them change their horses for fresh ones and meet me at the south gate. He sent also a man to my stable—Simon Fleix having dis-appeared in the confusion—for the Cid, and was in the act of inquiring whether I needed anything else, when a woman slipped through the knot of horsemen who surrounded us as we stood in the doorway of the house, and, throwing herself upon me. grasped me by the arm. It was Fanchette Her harsh features were distorted with grief, her cheeks were mottled with the violent weeping in which such persons vent their sorrow. Her hair hung in long wisps on her neck. Her dress was torn and draggled, and there was a great bruise over her eye. She had the air of one frantic with despair and misery.

She caught me by the cloak, add shook me so that I staggered. "I have found you at last!" she cried joyfully. "You will take me with you! You will take me to her!" Though her words tried my composure, and my heart went out to her, I strove to answer her according to the sense of the matter. "It is impossible," I said sternly. "This is a man's errand. "We shall have to ride day and night, my good woman," (To be Continued.)

PLAYING INDIAN TORTURES.

A Ten-Year-Old Boy Burned at the Stake by His Companions.

Washington, May 20 .- Bertiam Curtin, a 10-year-old lad, has just died from the effects of burns received while tied to a stake playing "Wild West" Indian tortures with a number of other children who had been affected by the recent visit of a circus. Among the realistic features provided for their games was a paper house, after the Midway Plaisance idea, and a lot of sawdust. One of the children had a box of matches. A sack which encased the victim of the stake accidentally took fire. All the children ran away, but little Curtin could not free himself until literally roasted.
