Clifton promised for Shirley that she would keep the appointment, and immediately dispatched a note to her informing her of the fact, and telling her that he would see her that evening and further explain matters to her.

Shirley was pleased at the thought of having the affair so speedly settled, and readily agreed to go to madame the next morning.

According, the following day, about ten o'clock, she donned a pretty street cos-tume of tan-brown, with hat and gloves to match, and started forth to test her practical motto which governed her purchases.

When she arrived at Mr. Norwood's residence she was shown, as before, into the library, where, with some trepidation, she awaited the appearance of Madame Marton.
She was not kept long in suspense, for presently she heard a sharp, high-pitched voice in the hall exclaim:
"Stay where you are, Blanche; I'm not so old and feeble yet that I cannot go downstairs by myself. Humph!" the voice added, in a low tone, just outside the library door, "I wonder if that handsome minx would be so eager to run at my beck and call if an elephant should step upon my purse."

my beck and call if an elephant should step upon my purse."

The next moment the door was pushed open, when Shirley saw the queerest old lady she had ever beheld standing upon the threshold.

She was perhaps 60 years old, with a sallow, wrinkled face, keen, piercing eyes of jet black, a nose every bit as sharp as her voice, and a mouth which had acquired an habitual expression of scorn and discontent; while her hair, which had been cut short on her neck, was quite gray, and combed away from her forehead straight behind her ears.

There were delicate ruffs of expensive beneiumes lace at her throat and ists; a valuable diamond, in an old-shioned setting fastened her dress at e neck, while several costly stones leamed upon her beny hands.

She wore black silk stockings and low shoes, while a bag of black satin, out of which peeped the corner of an elegant lace handkerchief, hung suspended by a black ribbon from her left arm, and completed this remarkably unique costume.

She sniffed contemptuously, and her arp nose wrinkled scornfully as she ught sight of Shirley.

"Humph!" she bluntly exclaimed, "You hust be one of Blanche's high-toned friends. Where is the girl who wants to be my companion?"

She spoke very good English, but with a decidedity French accent, and Shirley's twinkled with amusement as she had been taken, for one of her "high-toned friends."

She arose, however, and politicly placed a chair for the old lady.

"I am Shirley Livingstone?" she sharply demanded.

"How old never have thought of applying such a term to you." Shirley Livingstone?" she sharply demanded.

"An! I perceive that you are one of the wise as a Serpent and harmless as a Serpent and harmless as a Serpent and harmless as a Serpent and woman with a slight twitching of her thin lips; "but to wise as a Serpent and harmless as a

I take great pleasure in recommending it "Is there anything objects the my costume?" the young girl demurely inquired.

"It strikes me it's rather fine. Why, you are decked out like a Fifth avenue belle!" said madame, laconically.

A musical laugh rippled over Shirley's red lips at the thought of her inexpensive costumes of a fashionable young lady.

"Pardon me, madame," she said, quickly recovering herself. "But I really could not help it. My dress cost 50 cents a pot help it. My dress cost 50 cents a ly recovering herself. "But I really could not help it. My dress cost 50 cents a yard, and I made it myself; my hat also, at an expense of less than $2. But I regret if there is anything about either that displeases you, while at the same time I cannot fail to be pleased with the compliment you have unwittingly paid me."

CHAPTER XI.

Madame Marton regarded the young girl sharply for a moment, as if she scarcely knew whether to feel irritated or diverted by her amusement and the information she had vouchsafed regarding her abilities as a dressmaker and milliner. But Shirley looked so innocent of any intention to be disagreeable, and so genuinely pleased with the tribute paid to her taste and skill, that the hardest heart must have melted hefore her.

"So you made that dress yourself, did you? Did you cut and fit it?" the woman demanded, as she eyed it critically. "Yes, madame; I did everything about it."

"Humph! that tailor-made suit that Blanche had made at Redfern's doesn't fit a bit better, and she gave $150 for it," fit a bit better, and she gave $150 for it," commented madame, while her sharp eyes noted every seam and fold of her dainty costume. "Your hat, too, looks as if it might have come from the hands of a French milliner. By the way." she added, suddenly changing the subject, "you speak French, I'm told." "Oui, madame." 'said Shirley, with an unexceptional accent, "and German also." "Humph! that tailor-made suit that reaches every affected part. Such a remedy is Catarrhozone, which is inhalted into all portions of the throat, lungs and nasal passages, where it kills the germs, and cures the disease. Catarrhozone is pleasant, safe and absolutely sure to cure. It relieves the distressed feeling in the head, clears the throat and nostrils in one breath. Positive proof of cure is found in the words of Mr. Kirk, of Kingston, Ont., who says: "I suffered for fifteen years from Catarrh of the nose and throat, used hundreds of remedies, consulted specialists, but was not permanently benefited. Having personally witnessed a cure of thirty years standing, effected by Catarrhozone, I bought an outfit, and used it for a month. It cured me, and I am now no more liable to Catarrh than if I never had it." This is most convincing testimony from one of Kingston's best known and most highly respected business men. It proves beyond question that Catarrhozone absolutely cures Catarrh. It never fails; never harms; guaranteed to cure, Price, si; small size, 25 cents. Druggists or Polson & Co., Hartford, Com., U.
