HISTORY ABSOLVES MRS. O'LEARY'S COW

Chicago Celebration of 1871 Fire Minus Bovine's Effigy.

Chicago, Sept. 27.—After all these years, on which she has stood on a pedestal, much the same as the wolf that sucked Romulus and Remus, Mrs. O'Leary's cow has been dethroned.

It was announced today by the committee in charge of the semi-centennial Chicago fire celebration that the famous bovine would not be resurrected for the event—"Hamlet" without the melancholy Dane.

Research by the Chicago fire department, it was said, disclosed that both Mrs. O'Leary and her cow had been greatly wronged. Neither had anything to do with the great conflagration that wiped out the city of 1871, and laid foundations for a new and more splendid city.

Mrs. O'Leary, it appears from this report, had retired early, and while the blaze undoubtedly originated in the cow shed, it was not she, if anyone, who was milking the cow by the light of a kerosene lamp when the fire started.

The comic artists of the period kept the myth going by picturing the milkmaid milking the cow by the light of a kerosene lamp when the fire started.

The entries in the poultry show were exceptionally large. Dr. H. A. Stevenson, J. S. Walker and Gordon Bogue were the largest exhibitors. They carried off the majority of the prizes with splendid birds.

The vegetable exhibits of the school children also attracted a great deal of attention. The way the exhibit was laid out was praised by all the visitors, and the children were complimented on the interest they took to make the show a success.
