

holy book and have come across the passage directing them to render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's. So they gave to this working man not five cents but one cent.

Mr. McINTOSH: Did he get the cheque cashed?

Mr. HEENAN: No, I have it, and I have not got it cashed. I am going to take it with me and use it during the next campaign.

Then, I have another one for seventy cents. The person involved in this instance is a young man who went through university. All this government can offer him is a pick and shovel so that he may work in a camp in northern Ontario. At the end of the month after he had paid for a few knick-knacks which he required around the camp he had only seventy cents left. Then, I have another one for nine cents. In this instance I know the boy very well. His father equipped him with new boots, a new suit of overalls and new gloves, and he went out ready to work for the great and glorious Tory government which we have in the province of Ontario. At the end of the month's work he had nine cents coming to him.

Mr. MORAND: How much did he spend on knick-knacks?

Mr. HEENAN: All that he got, with the exception of nine cents.

Mr. BURY: What was the balance left after paying for the knick-knacks?

Mr. HEENAN: It was $4.91, if my figures are correct. That is about the price of a visit to a doctor's office. If anything had happened him he could not have been taken to an undertaker. Coming home at the end of the month he had the soles out of his boots from walking on the rocks. So he got nine cents and lost his "sole" working for the Ontario government. Any man who would vote for a government which would treat a Canadian in that way ought to lose his "sole." It is sad to think that that is all this government has done for the young men of Canada, after three and a half years in office. It is even sadder to think that some of the ministers smile and laugh at the misery of these young men.

Mr. MORAND: That is cheap.

Mr. HEENAN: It is cheap to smile; of course it is.

[Mr. Heenan.]

Mr. MORAND: No, it is cheap for you to say that.

Mr. HEENAN: That is all they do, smile and laugh and humbug. This government has been in office for more than three years and it is destroying the youth of this country.

Mr. MORAND: I am surprised at you, Peter.

Mr. HEENAN: They have gone on deceiving the people for over three years by bluffing, blundering and blasting. They were going to do something at the economic conference, yet to-day our railroads are rusting. Sixty-five thousand railway men are out of work. In 1931 the railway men of Canada earned $74,000,000 less than they did in the last year of the Liberal regime. In 1932 they earned $120,000,000 less than the last year we were in office, and in 1933, $130,000,000 less. I want to tell this House of Commons that the railway men of Canada have paid an awful price for having a Tory government in power. Instead of a scheme for unemployment insurance we have provisions which will bring about greater unemployment. We have a wheat agreement which will provide for the sale and export of only half of the wheat crop of Canada. If the government makes any more agreements we will not need our railways. They talk about building deep waterways, despite the bad condition in which our railroads are to-day. That is all we are getting from this government.

I am sorry it is about six o'clock because there were further points I should have liked to have made in regard to this subject. If I have spoken with greater warmth than is my custom it is because I feel the government is carrying on a humbug of continual promises; it is playing hot one day and cold the next. We have one minister saying one thing in one part of the country, and another minister saying another thing in another part. But when they face this House of Commons they say, "I was speaking only for myself." One good feature I see is that some of the ministers are at last able to speak for themselves. They have sat for more than three long years, none of them daring to utter a word, except on occasions when they have received a nod or a wink from the gentleman who is the whole government of the country.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.
