

we might endanger the greatest Part of what we now get, and may enjoy in Safety for ever.

If the Preliminaries then should be such as they are reported to be, and this be the right, the candid Way of considering them, surely no just Man, when he knows what they are, and no sensible Man, when he understands them, will refuse his Approbation to the most advantageous and honourable Peace that ever was made, or attempted to be made, for Great-Britain.
