

profession, and justice is well administered.—Controversies among the Catholics, are generally adjusted by the clergy, and litigations are not frequent. Pension, place, and favor are reserved for the English and Scotch adventurers, and the sons of Oxford and Cambridge.

A taste for literature, and desire after mental and other improvements is prevalent, and science will extend its happy effects among these new settlements.

Mechanics of every kind are established—Ship builders and mill-wrights have produced excellent specimens of their abilities. Most of the mills which are erected upon the larger streams and mill seats, are the labors of ingenuity, and bring profit to the proprietors.

A water voyage through these provinces from Kingston to Montreal is enchanting and entertaining,—cheap and expeditious—while much delay and many impediments, put the patience to the proof, in attempts to pass into the country against the stream.
