Secrets of Health and Happiness

Why Red, White and Blue Affect Your Mind and Body

By DR. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG. A. B., M. A., M. D., (John Hopkins University.)

All the water in the ocean can never turn the swan's black legs to white and All the water in the ocean can never turn the swan's black legs to white and all the added colors of the rainbow, be they even pure white and cheerful red, cannot, according to the scientific investigations just completed, take away or diminish the influence of black for maischief and evil.

Color vision differs considerably in different persons according to their inheritance, instincts and race. Human kind has vision for one stretch of the spectrum from red to violet through the intervening colors.

The effects of the noble colors, red, white and blue, in the American, Engitsh and French flags, strange to say, have been innocently observed upon men by experimental psychologists without regard to the fact that these were the patriotic colors of the world's greatest mations.

What Red Does.

Patriotic colors of the world's greatest nations.

What Red Does.

Indeed, hundreds of years ago it was recognized that red had a powerful effect upon disease and health. Doctors in the time of Queen Elizabeth, before the great English physician, William Jenner, discovered that vaccination usually prevented ugliness and death by smallpox, were properly in the habit of draping the windows and beds with red ourtains to reduce the scabs and scars of that dread malady. Nowadays, thanks to the carefully controlled and checked experiments, we know that red really does have that effect.

Psychologically, the colors red, white and blue are favorable to the formation of pleasant emotions. Red, particularly, makes the eye bright, the mind clear and cheerful, and at the same time frank and open. The influence of a red rag upon an enraged bull is more than academic. It rallies the energy, dash and courage of man as well as animals.

Elue and White,

There is a darkness, a blackness, that is more than felt and worse than ignorance. The Bible and inspired poets have said so, and experimental psychology has proved it. The black in the German flag is a sign and symbol. It is thereby something higher than an accident, for experimentally it has been found that black produces a dogged, dull ob.

Johnny Cricket was just about to turn back when his cousin. Billy Grasshopper, called him to come over to see him jump.

Johnny Cricket forgot all about his mamma's warning and hopped down besides Billy Grasshopper and back and forth over the meadow they hopped, chirping and laughing merrily.

"There's nothing out in this meadow to frighten us that I can see," said blackness and darkness in flags, forests and art upon the German tribes.

"Oh, bother! Mammas are always telling us, not to do this and that," cried Billy Grasshopper. "Best way's not to pay any attention. There's nothing but birds flying around here that could harm us, and we can easily see them flying above our heads in time to get out of the way."

The two naughty little meadow boys hopped upon a blade of grass and looked into the sky. There wasn't a bird in sight, and they were both singing merrily when Billy Grasshopper was jerked off the blade of grass and found himself in the sharp claws of a great, big, black cat with glassy green eyes.

Johnny Cricket was so frightened he couldn't move, and that would have been the end of those two naughty fellows if a pretty little white poodle dog hadn't bounded through the grasses and taken Miss Pussy so by surprise that she dropped Billy Grasshopper and hunched up her back and spit at the pretty poodle, who nearly barked his head off trying to frighten her and chased her away.

Poor Billy Grasshopper and Johnny Cricket crawled under a leaf and hid, for they knew if they hopped away Miss Pussy would again try to catch them, so they crouched under the leaf until the poodle chased Miss Pussy out of the field.

JOHNNY CRICKET'S NARROW

SCAPE.

Johnny Cricket wasn't a bad little cricket, but, dear me, he was never contented. If his mamma said not to go to a certain place, Johnny Cricket was very unhappy until he reached that very spot, and saw why she didn't want him to go there. Johnny Cricket was never satisfied with what he had; he always wanted more.

One day his mamma went in search of presence terrified me.

"Suppose he puts polson in the food," I said to Lillian, with apparent lightness, but a very real fear lay underneath the words.

"He would do that very thing if it suited his purpose," Lillian replied gravely, "but you can rest assured he will attempt nothing of the sort until after his employers make that grand stab for the paper. They'll risk nothing in the murder line until after that night. And by that time dear Kato will have greyes upon his wrists. However," she went on, "I advertised yesterday for a maid." "For a maid?" I repeated amused for

"Yes," Lillian replied inscrutably,

I also want you to understand it thoroughly."

"Very well." I returned meekly, for I knew there was no use of even questioning one of Lillian's decisions, but in the hours that followed I pondered wonderingly over this particular part of her plan in the few moments' respite I had from watching Kato and Cousin Agatha.

had from watching Kato and Cousin Agatha.

For with an inward smile I had to acknowledge the graphic picturesqueness of my mother-in-law's caustic homely comment upon them to the effect "that the snooping of those two animals is worse than any cat's." They seemed to be everywhere at once, and I gradually recognized the fact that both were hunting for the same thing—the hidden paper.

That Kato should be doing this was understandable. That Agatha should have found out anything concerning the paper surprised and troubled me. But Lillian cleared it up with a few trenshant words.

"They've Taken the Balt."

"She's got a hunch that you have something secreted about the house, and she's taken it into her suspicious old noddle that it is something discreditable to you," she said, "so she'll move heaven and earth to find it. We must take care she doesn't get at that vase first, although neither she nor kato have come anywhere near guessing so far."

For we had placed the bogus paper in the same Chinese vase where the genuine one had reposed for so long. It was protected with the same metal pencil case, and as the vase was kept constantly supplied with a fresh blossom in water, and as it was constructed as to require a magnet to get the pencil case out of it, we felt assured that we had almost an ideal hiding place until we should ourselves get ready to betray it.

we should ourselves get ready to be-tray it.

In the meantime the game of hide and seek which the Asiatic and Cousin Agatha made it necessary for me to play so absorbed me that I had almost forgotten Lillian's request to see no callers first, and my wonderment con-cerning it.

callers first, and my wonderment concerning it.

I was accordingly startled, indeed, when after a lengthy conference downstairs with someone whom William had ushered in, Lillian came upstairs with triumph upon her face.

"They've taken the bait, Madge," she said, "and I think we can kand the whole bunch by tomorrow night, I don't think they'll put it off longer."

I looked at her astonished.
She stooped and kissed me.
"Don't think I'm raving, child," she said. "And I want you to be very brave and to obey me implicitly for the next 24 hours. Whom do you think I've just engaged as maid."

food and told Johnny Cricket not to venture on the other side of the great high hill. "But why?" asked Johnny Cricket, who always wanted a reason for things. "Because I think it's best," replied Mamma Cricket, and kissing him goodbye, she hopped away. No sooner was she out of sight than Johnny Cricket began to wonder why he wasn't to go on the other side of the hill. Germany's Plans for Reestablishing Herself In the Markets of the World (CONTINUED FROM TUESDAY, OC TOBER 1.)

The same policy of amalgamation is being carried out by the banks, partly with the intention of meeting more easily the insatiable demands of the Government for war funds, partly with the idea of meeting more expeditiously and nomically the needs of industry and trade after the war. The result is that a few of the great banks in Berlin are gradually coming into a position where they will control absolutely the economic policy of the Empire, and there is little doubt that they will control it in the interest of the classes whom we consider responsible for the war. At the end of 1917 the total deposits of the eight leading joint-stock banks of Berlin amounted to 16,399 million marks, as compared with 10,000 million marks in 1916; 7,250 million marks in 1915, and 5,000 million marks in 1914. At the same time the Imperial Bank showed an increase of 1,153 million marks in gold holdings.

The Frankfurter Zeitung "deplores the gradual thinning of the ranks of private bankers and the increasing concentration of deposits in Berlin." It also asserts that the Imperial Bank is welding the banking system more and more closely together and adds that the Imperial Bank probably desires to make banking business profitable in order to find in it a powerful support during the difficult transition perior. Another leading journal states that "the general inclination is to regard the future prospects of German banking as rosy, ina as the present economic organization is likely to be retained for some time after peace is proclaimed, and as long as this lasts the interests of the banks will be bound up with those of the state." Another paper reports that "in the banking world Berlin high finance has proved itself so powerful that it has been able to absorb provincial institutions irrespective of their size. The Deutsche Bank set the pace by the extension of its connections in the East. The Disconto Gesellschaft followed suit, but did not confine itself to the East alone, extending its borders to the coast and to Central and West Germany. Among its concerns the Allgemeine Deutsche Kreditanstalt, in Leipzig, which long ago had banks. The Dresdner Bank has greatly extended its sphere of influence in the West; it now has over 88 branches and 100 deposit offices, many of the latter constituting a large bank in themselves."

PRODUCTION FOR EXPORT.

The immediate problem of Germany when the war ends will be to obtain a supply of raw material and to resume the production of goods. There is no doubt that such production, contrary to the normal procedure, will be primarily for export. Indications are that the great mass of the German people will be held for some time to their present reduced standards of living, that their use of the cheapest substitutes for ordinary food and clothing will continue, that strikes will be rigorously put down, that emigration will be restricted—all in order that foreign markets may be flooded with every variety of article that can be produced in Germany, always assuming that these foreign markets will be reopened to them. Germany must pay her debts and she will not be able to pay them by indemnities extorted from conquered nations. She can pay them only by exporting goods. Her preparations to do that have comprehended not only ganization at home but also organization abroad, and organization upon the principle that investments abroad are the very best guarantee of a market for goods

TRADE ASSOCIATION. In line with this policy there has been formed a new foreign trade associa tion, with central offices in Hamburg, which will concern itself exclusively with the development of German oversea business. According to the Kolnische Zeitung important export houses, manufacturing corporations, shipping lines, and banks in Hamburg and all the other commercial and industrial centres of the Empire will be interested. The company is to serve as an active and efficient axis, round which all Germany's efforts to re-knit her old relations and establish new ones will revolve. It is not to be a bank in the ordinary sense, or an export

Would it not be better to insist, now that we have them on the run, on putting them over the Rhine, sending them home in utter defeat, and then consider ways and means for peace, a just peace, a permanent peace, a peace that will give everybody, she went on, "I advertised yesterday for a maid." I repeated amazed, for it seemed the height of idiocy to bring a stranger into our highly charged houseof having the money in the country and world, there remains the necessity for confidence in a stable future to bring the money out and "Yes," Lillian replied inscrutably, "and I want you to promise me not to see any one of the applicants, if there be any, or, indeed, any other caller until after I have seen them. I'm going to give William, who will be at the door henceforth, orders to call me first, but I also want you to understand it thoroughly."

necessity for confidence in a stable future to bring the more of the world, and restoring it to its mormal activity. This war has upset and disorganized the whole world, and the work of readjustment when peace is declared, will have to be gone on with duct of the conflict. Every nation has felt the effects of the confligration in some way, and changes will be the natural sequence of a world peace. The Allies have the assurance now of an ultimate victory, and we turn to what Allies have the assurance now of an ultimate victory, and we turn to what effect this will have on securities. We have so often expressed through these columns our unlimited confidence ir the ultimate return to old prices for certain securities that we almost hesitate to particularize, but in our judgment, bonds, especially national obligations, will appreciate rapidly, while in stocks, fertilizers, agriculturals, oils, and equipments, will advance to considerably higher figures, as must also railroads which have for so long been selling below values.

CONFIDENCE IN RUSSIAN OBLIGATIONS IS BEING RESTORED.

Russian bonds have been stronger of late and in better demand in reflection developments adverse to the "Bullsheviki" who appear dominated with about the same brand of insanity as the German kaiser.

Russia is a country of wonderful possibilities. It stands to reason that after the war its land will be forced to disgorge its natural wealth in a measure which would never have been possible except for the world war and the demoralization

The country is of sufficient natural wealth to, under proper guidance, make good every penny of outstanding indebtedness. Russia cannot possibly hope to hold its head up among the nations of the world unless it does acknowledge and take care of its exterior obligations.

When the terms of peace are finally dictated it may be accepted as a foregone conclusion that the conditions imposed by Germany on a crushed Russia in the infamous Brest Litovsk treaty will become null and void, and a new treaty drawn up which will enable Russia to expand and develop in proper fashion.

We feel that Russian securities, therefore, afford attractive speculative chances. They are, however, so strictly speculative that no one not in a position to assume considerable risk should make commitments. Russia has an exseedingly trying period before it and in our opinion there will be considerably more bloodshed and worse demoralization than even now exists before the country will be taken out of chaos and restored to a condition of stability and rule. But in the end, a new Russia, virile and progressive, an entirely different country from the old one, will emerge and again rank with the leading nations

LLOYD GEORGE WISDOM ON LIFE INSURANCE.

The willingness to take risks is in the great merchant or capitalist, a virtue. t is to him what courage is to a soldier or a statesman, or imagination to a poet. But the willingness to take risks is in the wage earner or the salary earner, a weakness, or in great excess, a vice. The contrary of the vice of gambling er, a weakness, or in great excess, a vice. The contrary of the vice of gamming is in the virtue of thrift, and the system of life insurance has given the thrifty man an opportunity of practicing his virtue. - David Lloyd George.
