Lord Curzon's Daughter To Wed Lord Althorp?

Lord Curzon's daughter, Lady Mary Curzon, is reported to be in the exclusive company of Lord Althorp, and it is said that she is being courted by him. The Duke of Devonshire, Lord Curzon's father-in-law, is said to be opposed to the match. The Duke of Devonshire is said to be a very powerful man, and his opinion is of great weight. Lord Althorp is a young man of great family and fortune. He is said to be a very handsome man, and is very popular with the ladies. Lady Mary Curzon is a very beautiful woman, and is very popular with the gentlemen. The match would be a very desirable one for both families.

Gossip of Duchess and Actress Who Has Usurped Her Place - The Queen's Ban on Some Society Folk

The Duchess of Devonshire, who has a temper, also has a sense of humor and has been telling of the condensation of the "wither woman." The artist I am referring to, has recently had some most tempting offers to go to the United States, but the duke will not allow her to go out of England, or indeed very far out of his sight. After the recent supper party tragedy on the Thames an enterprising cinema manager from the United States went round to the important participants and offered them enormous sums if they would pose for a film representing the affair. Lady Diana Manners was the only one who was polite to him, the others, especially Nancy Cunard and Felicity Tree, said that if he did not get out of their sight they would see to it that they would send for the police and have him removed. The king and queen have recently had some most tempting offers to go to the United States, but the duke will not allow her to go out of England, or indeed very far out of his sight.

THE MONARCH OF AUSTRO-HUNGARY

Emperor Francis Joseph, Head of The Unhappy Hapsburg Family

(T. P.'s Weekly)

The humanity of the Austrian Emperor is revealed in his dealings with the peasantry. In his earlier days the emperor had many adventures in the mountains, for, undistinguished in his shooting, he was obliged to carry the Tyrolean peasants often failed to recognize him. Once, when he was descending late in the evening from one of these expeditions, he met an old wrinkled peasant woman, grumbling and grumbling under the weight of a faggot. The emperor addressed a cheery good evening to her. His overtures were not at all well received, for the old lady was in a very bad temper. "If I were a great strong man," she observed, "I should like to help a body to carry the faggot, and carried it for nearly two miles to the nearest village, with the old lady grumbling at him behind. It was only when she saw the imperial foresters anxiously looking out for their master, that she shifted her burden to the heavily-weighted shoulders of the emperor. The burden of Empire.

Truly those shoulders have carried a weight. He was born in 1830, a son of the Archduke Francis Charles and of Sophie, daughter of Maximilian I. of Bavaria, and had a good training for one born of a royal house, destined to weather stormy seas. His position as a future Austrian ruler made it necessary for him to know French, Italian, German, Czech and Polish. The diplomatic art he learnt from Metternich himself. And as a soldier he learnt all that need be known by infantry, cavalry, or artillery men. Literature, chemistry and mathematics were subjects in which his mother saw that he had a thorough grounding. And it is a well known fact that Vienna musical circles are much exercised as to whether his successor will subsidize the fine opera house to the same extent.

The very year of his birth had been one of revolution in Austria, and 1848 was a critical year for Italy and Austria were at loggerheads. It must be remembered that at that time there was no German Empire, nor a United Italy. What is now the Triple Alliance was as divided as the Balkan States today. And Austria and Hungary were severed by racial differences which are to this day fundamental. "Farewell to Youth," said the emperor on his accession.

The Hungarian War

The very year following his accession war began. Austria accepted the emperor. Tyrol was loyal. But the Hungarians would accept him only as King of Hungary subject to their own law. Francis Joseph has told us the details of that dreadful civil strife that even the good-natured, young monarch could not avert. Croatian soldiers were given leave to ravish and pillage. Women, in-

PRIVATE LIFE

The emperor was as fond of his pipe, which in later years was a constant companion. So too, the poor Cinderella Empress was. And it seems a pity that she should have drifted apart and died a violent death at the hands of an assassin.

But it is pleasant to tell stories of Francis Joseph's kindnesses to his subjects. He was a very good man, and of such kindnesses there is no end. A little barefooted boy ran towards the emperor's carriage as he was driving into Vienna one day, threw a letter into it, and disappeared down a side street. The boy, whose name was Joseph, was out of employment, and had written a pathetic letter to His Majesty requesting assistance for his father, a carpenter, who was out of employment, and for his five little brothers and sisters, who were starving at home. He added that he would give up his position as a soldier for the rest of his life as soon as he should reach the age of twenty-one. His Majesty would help them. By the emperor's command investigations were made, and the family was found to be in great distress. Francis Joseph sent them a considerable sum of money, and he also placed the boy Joseph in a high-class technical school.

The Karolyi Curse

A son of the Countess Karolyi had been slain as a rebel in that tragic war of the Succession in Hungary. And she had pronounced this curse upon the emperor:-

"May Heaven and Hell blast his happiness! May his family be exterminated! May he be smitten in the persons of those he loves! May his life be wrecked, and may his children be brought to ruin!"

She has a formidable list. The marriage failure, involving separation, the tragic death of their son, Rudolph, in the team "Wagon No. 11" and the assassination of the emperor. Add to this the murder of the emperor's brother-in-law by Mexican Republican rebels, and several minor incidents of fatal import. His long reign has been fraught with international trouble, and the progress of war on a large scale after the Balkan struggle was but narrowly averted. For some time the old man's health has given grave anxiety and the very succession is likely to give cause for fresh debate; so that a discussion of European politics is incomplete without the recollection of this leading, if old, actor on the stage of nations. Since this was written the present war broke out.
