

A NEW ELDORADO
 Edmonton, Alta., Sept. 20 — After searching thirty-two years for gold, John Gentle, aged seventy-two, arrived at Edmonton Monday morning with the news that at last he had reached Eldorado. To substantiate his statements he brought several gold nuggets, some over an ounce in weight.
 He interested three local professional men and all decided to file claims on what may be a new Klondike. They left by the G. T. P. Monday night, their destination being somewhere north of the end of steel on the MacLeod River.

RECENT WEDDINGS
 Worden-Daniels
 An event of much interest took place at Trinity church, Kingston, Kings county, N. B., on Wednesday, Sept. 17, at 2:30 p.m., when Rev. Gordon G. Lawrence united in marriage Bertha Mae Worden, of St. John, formerly of Kingston, and Annie Rankine Daniels, of Bar Harbor, Me. The bride was given away by her cousin, Henry Daniels, of Franklin, Mass., while Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Daniels, of Kingston, N. B., supported them. The bride was attired in a traveling suit of tan broadcloth, with white picture hat and carried a shower bouquet of white carnations while the maid of honor carried pink and white flowers. After the wedding lunch was served at the home of Mrs. G. M. Parley, 410 West street, A. Worden, Brook Cottage, Kingston, N. B. The happy couple left for their future home on Adelaide street, St. John, N. B. Among the many useful presents received, was a substantial check from Mrs. Margaret E. Daniels, and bedroom set of oak from the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John M. Parley, of St. John, N. B. A pretty wedding took place in St. John's church, Highfield, Queens county (N. B.), at 8 o'clock, September 17, when Miss Margaret Eugenia, third daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Parley, of St. John, N. B., was given away by her father, Richard, Milton Boardman, son of John Boardman, of Hampton.

Also Gladys Evelyn, fourth daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Parson, was given in marriage to Herbert John Edridge, formerly of England.

STUDY OF METHODS BY CIVIC EXPERTS

Tour of European Countries To Investigate

OUTLINE OF RESULTS:
 Inquiry Into Housing Conditions—Care of Streets and Sanitation in Cities Abroad

(Washington, D. C., Star)

The group of civic experts and students of civic who left Washington and New York in July for a tour of European countries, under the auspices of the American Civic Association, has returned. Richard B. Watrous, secretary of the association, of this city, arrived in Washington yesterday.

The members of the party were given unusual opportunities to make careful investigations of the methods applied in the cities of Germany, France and England for efficient administration, with particular reference to the care of streets, the disposal of household waste, the creation and maintenance of parks and the solution of housing problems, and the large general subject of comprehensive city planning.

Four of the six weeks abroad were spent in cities of Germany, one week in Paris and a week in London, with two days at Brussels, where the party was entertained at dinner at the home of the American ambassador, Theodore Marburg.

"The trip has been a most valuable one in every way," Mr. Watrous said today. As secretary, he had in charge the arranging of the civic programme at the various cities.

"We were accorded unusually courteous attention by the city officials and members of voluntary organizations, due largely to the admirable arrangements that had been made for our coming by our American consular officers, who had been advised by the State Department of our trip, and asked to do what they could for us."

Meet City Officials
 "At each city visited, on our arrival, we had as our guests at dinner the consular general or consul, together with four to six city officials who had been asked him to invite also as our guests. In that way we were introduced to and obtained most valuable information from just the authorities we desired to meet, and, following the evening's discussion, mapped out a programme to cover the number of days we were to be in each city."

"In this way we were able to pursue new and independent lines of investigation, to get at methods of administration and to study under the best conditions the systems in vogue that have confuted such a rare measure to make the German cities, in particular, distinguished for cleanliness and efficiency."

"With all the splendid things we saw we returned Americans more than ever, but are convinced that many of the customs practiced in these foreign cities could be adopted to great advantage by our communities of the United States. I made a diligent search in many of the German cities for evidence of neglect in the care of the streets, but I confess I would have been glad to disprove some of the statements that have been made as to the absolute cleanliness of the streets of German cities, but I simply could not find such neglect."

"I made it a point to get away from the main thoroughfares and to study the streets that are used by the residents rather than by the tourists."

Needs of Washington
 "While, of course, our observations were of a general nature and with a view to applying the information we secured to all of our American communities, I was particularly interested to bear in mind constantly my own Capital city of Washington and its needs, and for that reason, I gave some special attention to the study of housing conditions in Berlin and other German cities, and in Paris and in London, and I think I have obtained data concerning municipal housing that should have a very direct and valuable application to our own existing conditions and the important effort now being made to eliminate some of the objectionable alleys and substitutes for those bad housing conditions improved conditions, which I am convinced might very properly be conducted by the government."

"In two cities, at least, I found notable examples of municipal housing operations—that is, where garbage in a week, or possibly two weeks, as many of our homes produce in a day. Then, the city street, with no intermediate other accumulations were dumped on the land all of the contents of the carts had passed through the hands of women engaged to pick out and sort everything that might be of merchantable value, such, for instance, as old shoes, rubbers, crockery, metal, paper, cotton and woolen goods and glass. The returns from this collection, together with the enhanced value of the land owned by the company owning the contract, are so profitable that the contracting company makes no charge to the city for its service of collection, which is a very important development, meaning, as it does, that the individual household does not pay a tax for that service nor does the city as a collective body pay."

"The only expense to which the city is put is that of transporting by rail the wagon boxes with their contents, collected by the company, from the city to the suburb, where they are again delivered to the contractor for assortment and distribution. But here again arises a distinction between German and American methods. Much of the street cleaning of German cities is done by women and children."

"I don't imagine that our American cities will come to that practice in many years, if ever, nor can one imagine women engaged in the same dirty and menial service that we found them engaged in at the Munich garbage disposal plant. The important thing to be noted, however, is that by the employment of sufficient help, the streets of large cities can be kept as clean as the streets of smaller cities, and also that garbage and other household waste can be collected and at a very slight expense to the city because of the returns that may be derived in a business way by the contractor. It remains for American ingenuity and en-

New Ideas in Care of Streets
 "We discovered some splendid new ideas for the care of streets. In Berlin, for instance, we were greatly interested in a contract that the city had just made for the installation of 7,000 new street litter boxes, which differ from those now used in that, instead of being on and above the surface of the ground, they are sunk in concrete cases below the pavement. The street litter is swept into these boxes, which are sealed with a cover, similar to the ordinary street litter box, but which is equipped with a hoisting device by which the box is lifted out of its case to the top of the cart, its contents being made as to be immediately covered with metal covers, so as to prevent any scattering by wind or other agencies."

"It is a distinctly new development, in that it removes one more surface obstruction; that it eliminates the possibility of the scattering of the street sweepings by the ordinary shoveling process, and that it is economical and another step forward for the safety of the public health, because anything that reduces the scattering of the street dust is for the benefit of public health."

"Then, too, we conducted important investigations in the disposal of the waste of the cities, including incineration on the one hand and on the other the distribution of garbage over low, swampy lands and converting such lands into fertile farm lands. We were inclined to think the last-named method might not be a safe or wise one, but when we had investigated it thoroughly, as conducted by the city of Munich, we were convinced that, so far as making new land was concerned, it was a complete success. That was possible largely, however, because German people do not have a great deal of garbage."

Garbage Production Small
 "They are thrifty and their homes do not produce as much garbage in a week, or possibly two weeks, as many of our homes produce in a day. Then, the city street, with no intermediate other accumulations were dumped on the land all of the contents of the carts had passed through the hands of women engaged to pick out and sort everything that might be of merchantable value, such, for instance, as old shoes, rubbers, crockery, metal, paper, cotton and woolen goods and glass. The returns from this collection, together with the enhanced value of the land owned by the company owning the contract, are so profitable that the contracting company makes no charge to the city for its service of collection, which is a very important development, meaning, as it does, that the individual household does not pay a tax for that service nor does the city as a collective body pay."

"The only expense to which the city is put is that of transporting by rail the wagon boxes with their contents, collected by the company, from the city to the suburb, where they are again delivered to the contractor for assortment and distribution.
