"Thanky, ma'am, for the intention,"

said the old gentleman. "It's a queer language, the Chinese," said an old gentleman who was postmaster of a little station on the road. "It's all screeches when it's talked. screetches and crows: and when it's writ it's slantindicular. I've had letters come to Chinamen that you wouldn't have known from tea-box markings-Sam Ling and Cho Ping-and so they used to come and pick'em out for themselves; seemed to make no difference to them which they had-I couldn't see "There have been some highly educated Chinese women," said the teacher. "To Hi Pan, a Chinese lady of rank, wrote several books, and was also esteemed beautiful."

"Gracious!" said a very fat woman with a big hand-basket. "Beautiful. Squeeney-eyed things like them, dressed jest like men."

Suddenly: "What's the matter now?" cried the poor old gentleman, looking out of the window. "Hello! gentlemen, look to your pistols. I rather think we are about to meet a rough lot of customers.'

The driver, who had whipped up his horses a moment before, did his best

The old stage rattled and creaked. The fat lady began to cry; the teacher turned pale; the commercial traveller caught his portmanteau by the handle the actor put on a determined air, and I stuck my head out of the window. I drew it in again as a bullet whizzed past my nose, and the next moment the stage stopped, and we were surrounded by a gang of ruffians.

Every man fired his pistol and hit nothing, and had it taken from him-The fat lady wept; the teacher sat like a statute of contempt, and shot glances of indignation at the robbers. The commercial traveller defended his portmanteau, and the robbers instantly took it away from him. Each of us lost a watch and his purse, whatever jewelry we might have, and our pocket-handkerchiefs. The robbers left the poor old gentleman to the last, as may be imagined, and when they came to him he stood holding out a small leather purse, and saying meekly;

"It's got seventy-five cents in it, and I'd be obliged if you'd let me keep the penny with a hole in it, for it is a mement of a lost friend."

The appeal touched us all.

An Automatic Reed Organ.

"THE ORGUINETTE may now she called a celebrated instrument. In tone it is akin to the abinet Organ, but the organ must be a mipulated by an artist in order to produce music; the UR-NETTE is on the other hand entirely mechanical in its action, and at triffing expense it can be made furnish an unlimited supply of all kines of music." Forento Globe.

"THE ORGUINETTE is indeed a musical wonder. It is a unlimiture reed organ, with as strong and melodions a tone as the Cabinet Size. It surpasses the Cabinet Organ, for the reason that the noramus in music can play it as well as the most accomplished processor. THE ORGUINETTE is rong and accurate in its mechanism, and consequently not liable to get out of order." - Montreal reset. "THE ORGUINETTE is the most perfect automatic musical instrument yet invented, its repertolipe is unlimited, the tone is remarkably good."—Montreal Star.
