RAILROAD KING LEAVES HIS THRONE.

(Mall and Empire.)

Louis Warren Hill, who succeeds his father as president of the Great Northern Railway, is the second son and one of a family of nine. His elder brother, James N. Hill, stood in line for the position until three years ago, when ill-health caused his retirement from railroad work. Louis was graduated from Yale in 1891, and ever since has been in training for some big railroad job. He has had experience as a railroad president for many years, his father having broken him to the business in two or three of the many companies that are subsidiary to the Great Northern. It is only reasonable to assume that he is competent, for his father is much too shrewd a man, and the Great Northern is too dear a possession to be trusted to any capable man, no matter what his relationship to the retiring president.

TRAINING THE BOSS.

The training their father has given his three sons in railroad matters has been thorough. They have had to earn their salary from the beginning, and the youngest, it is said, started on $8 a week. It is related of him that on one occasion, when his father was in Europe, he "played hooky" from work, trusting that his father's position would save him from rebuke. In this he reckoned without the conscientious scruples of his immediate superior. The young man found himself suspended, and he did not get back to the office until his father returned. The official got a raise in salary, and the youngster was soundly reprimanded. President Louis Hill was married in 1901, his wife being Miss Maud Van Courtland Taylor, a New York society girl, who took nursing as a pastime. At a nurse she met Mr. Hill, and their marriage was the result.

IN THE DAYS OF THE PANIC.

Stories of the father, who is retiring after one of the most remarkable careers in the business history of the United States, are going the round of the American press. For the truth of them we cannot vouch, but we can vouch for the fact that they are worth. This is said of them at least—they are truthful in their representation of Jim Hill's character as it is known to those nearest to him. One of the most interesting throws a mere sidelight on Hill's ability to make friends, another man being the hero of the episode. It appears that at the time when the financial world was convulsed with the Titanic fight between Hill and Harman for the control of the Union Pacific, when the shares of this stock soared to fabulous figures, an old Scotchman was discovered living in Alaska-Baines, Frances, who held enough stock in Hill properties to turn the tide against the president of the Northern. At once a representative of the Harman interest was sent to him, and an attempt was made to buy him out. He was offered a profit of $5,000,000 on the deal, but he steadfastly refused to sell. "I have enough millions," he said, "and Hill has helped me to make them. I will not go back on my friend."

TWO HILL STORIES.

One of the rules on the Great Northern is that after a freight has crossed a trestle a watchman is to go over the bridge with a pail of water to extinguish possible sparks. Soon after this rule had been made, Mr. Hill happened to be travelling over the road. As he passed the trestle, his quick eye noticed a hole in the rail that the fireman was supposed to use in the inspection of the bridge. He stopped his special and went back to the man, whom he discharged on the spot. On another occasion he went with an expert to look for a bed of gravel, great quantities of which were needed for ballast. The expert scoured the country in vain, but could not find a sign of gravel. Whereupon Mr. Hill picked up a small weed from the spot where they were standing, and said, "William, you needn't look any farther; whenever you find this weed there is gravel," and so it proved.

AN ALL-ROUND SPECIALIST.

Hill's career has proved that the specialist reaches his highest development as an all-round man. To become the greatest transportation genius of his time, it was necessary for him to be a politician, a financier, a student of foreign countries, a stock raiser, a lumberman, a mining man, and several other things. To thoroughly understand the railroad business, he had also to understand a dozen other businesses that were affected by it.

ONE OF THREE GREATEST AMERICANS.

The late Senator Arthur Pue Gorman once said of Hill: "If I were asked to name three men of the United States who tower above their fellows in the things that make men great in this world, I should name James N. Hill, and the three, and it would need less than three minutes to make the nomination. He is the greatest genius of transportation the world has ever seen, and in many other ways he looms an intellectual giant." The fact that Mr. Hill is a Canadian by birth is not made any less prominent in the reminiscences in the press of the United States. Nor is it known that Mr. Hill himself does not pride himself on this country might have in his achievement is so much less than the pride he is entitled to have in his native land that it is hardly worth noting. It is an interesting historical fact, however, that he was born near St. John, N. B., and was a store in the Royal City. Later he went West, and earned his living as a dock hand in St. Paul. He became a station agent, a packing agent, a packer, and owner of a transportation and fuel business.

HIS LOVE ROMANCES.

When he was station agent near St. Paul, he boarded at the Merchants' Hotel, where one of the waitresses was Mary McEgan. They fell in love, and the girl consented to let him pay the expenses of the education she had secured for her. The romance was turned out very happily, although our authority for this statement remarks that Mr. Hill's favorite amusement is playing solitaire. Mrs. Hill is a Roman Catholic, which explains Mr. Hill's interest in the Roman Catholic college near St. Paul. It cannot be said that he had been especially celebrated for his philanthropy, although he is reputed to be worth $100,000,000. But the reason probably is that his head and his heart are filled with big things than philanthropy in the conventional sense of the word. World problems are his in as real a sense as they are those of any living statesman or potentate. There is hardly any branch of human activity that he does not translate into terms of freight for the railway he has created; and in making this road the greatest in the world, for this is his ambition, he feels that he is doing one of the greatest and most beneficent works that ever engaged the energies of a man.

CANNO STEAMER SINKS WHILE TRYING TO CUT THROUGH ICE.

CANNO, N. S., April 11.—A serious accident was narrowly averted near Canno today when the steamer Olive, bound for White Head with several passengers, was sunk by breaking of a plank in trying to force her way through the body of old ice in Dover Run. Passengers, including several ladies, were with difficulty landed on the ice and by walking several miles reached the settlement of Dover, thence returned by the railway. The steamer is owned by the Whitman Fish Company and is employed by that company in collecting fish around Chedabucto Bay and Westward. It is hoped that the steamer will be raised and repaired.

KING EDWARD'S CIGAR PRESENT.

LONDON, April 11.—An immense box, containing 1,000 cigars, arrived at Buckingham Palace. It was a present from Baron Rothschild to King Edward. For over thirty years His Majesty has received a similar present from the Baron. The cigars are worth about $2.65 each.

REFUSED HIM AFTER ALL.

HAMILTON, Ont., April 11.—Some time ago Smith H. German, of Southey, Sask., inserted an advertisement for a wife in several eastern papers. Among the answers he received was one from a Hamilton woman. The two corresponded and a few days ago German came here expecting to make her his wife. She, however, refused to have anything to do with him. He has started for home without his bride and minus about $400, which, he says, the trip cost. He consulted the local police about his matrimonial troubles but they could not do anything for him. 11-4-11

MILLIONAIRES OF 80 STARVES HERSELF

Miss Gibbs, Astor's Cousin, Locks Doors and Goes Hungry.

NEWPORT, R. I., April 11.—Though she was found ill and very weak for the want of food a few days ago, it is believed tonight that Miss Emily O. Gibbs, sister of Mrs. Edwin A. Post, of New York, and second cousin of the late Mrs. John Jacob Astor, mother of William Waldorf Astor, will recover.

Miss Gibbs who is said to be worth several million dollars, lives in a handsome villa overlooking the beach and city.

Miss Gibbs, who is nearly 80 years old, has not been well for many years. Recently she discharged all the servants and looked herself in her room.

A faithful gardener brought her food, which she refused. After several days he and a friend affected an entrance and found the old woman nearly dead from starvation.

A physician and nurse were put into the house and a new regime of servants engaged. Under treatment Miss Gibbs is slowly regaining her strength, though she is still confined to her bed.
