Work, with its thousand eyes and thousand feet and thousand arms, goes on singing the drums of the mill beat it and the steam whistles fife it. In the carpeted aisles of the forest, in the woods from which the eternal shadow is never lifted, on the shore of the sea over whose iron coast tosses the tan-gled foam, sprinkling the cracked cliffs with a baptism of whirlwind and tempest, is the best place to study God, but in the rushing, swarming, raving street is the best

Again, in all cities I am impressed with the fact that all classes and conditions of society must commin-

gle. We sometimes cultivate a wick-ed exclusiveness. Intellect despises may do by their allurements to unsuspecting and the unguarded text is Zechariah i, 17, "My citthrough prosperity shall yet be ad abroad."

The city is no worse than the councile city is no worse than the council city is not city in the city is not contained to the city is not city in the city in the city is not city in the city in the city is not contained to the city in the city in the city is not contained to the city in the city in the city is not contained to the city in the city The vices of the metropolis are evident than the vices of the ought not so to be. I like this democratic principle of the gospel of Jesus Christ which recognizes the fact that we stand before God on one chant is as good as the farmer.

The is no more cheating in town to out of town—no worse cheating it is only on a larger scale, the countryman sometimes prevaricates about the age of the horse that he selfs, about the size of the bushel with which he measures the grain, about the peaches at the bottom of the basket us being as large as those at the top, about the quarter of beef theing tender when it is tough, being tender when it is tough, and the same platform. Again, in all claims I am impressed with the fact that it is a very hard time respects they are worse than the cities because they copy the vices the cities in the meanest shape, the cities in the meanest shape, the cities in the meanest shape. the cities in the meanest shape, and as to gossip its heaven is a untry village. Everybody knows erybody's business better than he ows it himself. The grocery store the blacksmith shop by day and ght is the grand depot for mascue tittle tattle, and there are algos in the village a half dozen woem who have their sunbonnets hangen much affluence, how much temptation to be discontented with our humble lot! Amid so many opportunities for overreaching, what temptation to extortion! Amid so much display, what temptation to vanity! Amid so much display, what temptation to vanity! Amid so many saloons of strong drink, what allurements to dissipation! In the maelstroms and hell gates of the street, how many make quick and eternal shipwreck! If a man-of-war comes back from a battle and is towed into the navy yard, we go down to look at the splintered spars and to be discontented with our humble lot! Amid so much display, what temptation to extend the good for the sake of his spiritual interests the Lord is on his side, and one with God is a majority. But if you have been much among the cities you have also noticed that they are full of temptations of a political character. It is not so more in one city than in all the cities. Hundreds of men going down in our cities every year through the pressure of politics. Once in a while a man will come out in a sort of missing that they are full of temptations of a political character. It is not so more in one city than in all the cities. The cities in Europe were to be occupied by Asiatics; the cities in his hand. He said in defiance: "No, be occupied by Asia were to be occupied, according to his plans, by Europeans, and so God, sir, don't want me to read and to his plans, by Europeans, and so there should be a commingling and a fraternity and a kindness and a good will between the continents and between the cities. So there always ought to be. The strangest thing in my comprehension is that there should be bickerings and rivalries among our American cities. Perhaps I are more scrupulous than I need be. This little bargain I am about to enhall only do as the rest." One of the mightiest temptations in commercial life in all cities today is in the fact that many professed Christian men are not square in their bargains. Such men are in Baptist and Methodist and Congregetional churches, and our own deomination is as largely represented s any of them. Our good me chants.
