CATTLE HANGED IN THEIR STANCHIONS WHEN BARN COLLAPSED

Penobscot, Oct. 19.—(Special)—Nearly fifty men worked for hours here yesterday trying to save the cattle and grain of Gibson McLeod, a brother of Judge Nelson. The occurrence was a peculiar one, probably without parallel in Kings county.

The cattle, a herd of Ayrshires and grade cows, were stanchioned on the ground floor of a large barn. Beneath them was a manure pit. Overhead was a scaffold or mezzanine floor. This, supported about forty tons of hay and oats. The wind blew a gale Saturday night and the force may have weakened the barn through the roof and main frame of the stanchions. Charles McLeod was about to enter the barns yesterday morning when the timbers supporting the grain suddenly gave way and the tremendous weight fell upon the cattle, burying them, and breaking through the floor on which they stood. Some of the cows were hanged in their stanchions when the floor gave way and so were soon strangled. Others were smothered by the hay and grain.

Rescuers were summoned and worked with intense vigor to get at the cattle but many were dead when the covering was removed and others died after they were taken out. Five cows and a large cross Ayrshire bull were taken out alive. After great exertion on the part of the men who hastened to Mr. McLeod's farm as soon as they heard of his trouble, they were taken out.
