

THE BRITISH MINERS

The subsidy promised by Lloyd George to the striking miners of England and Wales, if they return to work, is but another expedient of the crafty minister to extricate himself from one of his most embarrassing promises. After having originally promised the miners all that they now demand, he has, with his wonted facility of shifting position, turned his back upon them.

In their struggle for a decent livelihood the British miners ought to have the sympathy of the entire world. For centuries the mines of England have been dark and dismal prisons where English men and women, boys and girls, have slowly worked out their lives in a deadening serfdom.

Conditions in the present age have not been appreciably better. It is not many years since Mr. Charles E. Lester, an American, wrote his book on "The Glory and Shame of England," in which he exposed some of the economic conditions in England that were appalling. Speaking of the "infant and female slaves in the English coal mines," he said: "Slavery in its most hideous form never equalled this, and the conditions, physical as well as moral, of the most degraded in bondage may be esteemed exalted if compared with that of a free collier in England."

And he quoted, as follows, the comments of a London paper on a report laid before parliament: "The infernal cruelties practised upon boys and girls in the coal mines, those graves of comfort and virtue, have never in any age been outside. We have sometimes read, with shuddering disgust, of the outrages committed upon helpless children by a man existing in a state of naked savagery. We never our belief that in cold blooded atrocity they do not equal what is going on from day to day in some of our coal mines."

It was exploitation of labor much less criminal than this that inspired the mild and conservative Theodore Maynard to write in a recent article: "We must make our choice between economic justice or Red revolution. The longer we continue to refuse justice the likelier we are to have the choice made for us. I grant that it is not easy to make the effort required. It involves a good deal of re-education—and a surgical skill greater than that demanded by the operation I have just described (the supposed method by which a Bolshevik doctor cures a cold in the head—by cutting the patient's head off.) But, if not so simple, justice is far more salutary."

There can hardly be any doubt that Lloyd George obliterated the threatened strike of the other two branches of the Triple Alliance by buying off the leaders. This is his worst method of overcoming strong opposition. But such expedients only defer the blow. England will yet feel under the burden of its governmental iniquities.—Catholic Union and Times.

VACATION DANGERS

The advent of Summer brings with it a relaxation of the strenuous life that features the rest of the year. Summer is universally considered vacation time. For a few weeks practically all give themselves over to the recreation of a tired body and jaded nerves. This is as it should be. But there must be limits.

Vacation time may be properly employed and be a blessing or it may be misused and find us in the end in a worse condition physically, mentally and morally than we were when we started. It is well therefore for Catholics to take thought concerning this very important matter.

At the present time the facilities for the practice of one's religion are so ample that there is little excuse for their neglect. Practically every resort today has its church where Mass is said regularly or at least on Sunday. Catholics should see to it that they select a place where they may enjoy the consolations of religion. No one can tell when the priest may be needed. And it is a proven fact that his ministrations are sorely needed during this time. Sickness is likely to overtake the strongest and most robust as well as those who are frail and sickly. God's visitations no man can know. Hence the utter necessity of Catholics choosing a resort where this most essential matter will have its due need of attention.

It is frequently the case that many seek to spend their vacations without the proper aids. While relaxing the body from its accustomed duties, it by no means follows that the intellect should be starved. In point of fact many of our greatest scholars and educators state that there is intense enjoyment and recreation to be had in reading good books during vacation time. And what can be more profitable than an acquaintance with our best Catholic authors? This time is aptly suited to making such an acquaintance. Often we hear men saying that literature has retrogressed. So it has in certain quarters. But there is an ample supply of the very finest Catholic literature that is almost unknown to the majority of Catholics.

They can do nothing better than search the Catholic bookshelves for constructive, uplifting and edifying reading during these precious days. There will be the temptation to delve into the trashy, ephemeral novels that disgrace many book stalls under the claim of the "Best Sellers." These may well be overlooked as a general rule. They possess neither style, attraction nor food for decent thought. They leave the reader in the end where he started or produce some unseemly reflections and memories that subvert the right ordering of life.

Finally, there are dangers that must be avoided during vacation. There is no such thing as a moral holiday. The devil is never found wanting in the carrying out of his wicked designs. At every turn, because of vocational relaxation, there will appear perils both to body and soul. God exacts an account of our thoughts, words, actions and omissions no less during the short period that men call vacation than during the busy days of the rest of the year. The moral law always binds. It is always in full force.

Vacation, therefore, while a pleasant time, is filled with dangers and these must be foreseen and offset. This means that we pay more than
