Remarks on Slavery.

BY GOVERNOR BRIGGS, IN HIS ANNUAL MESSAGE TO THE LEGISLATURE OF MASSACHUSETTS. The question whether negro slavery shall or shall not be excluded from the territories of the Union which are now free, is seriously agitating the public

The people of the slaveholding states deny the right of the general government to keep slavery out of its territories. In their popular meetings, legislative halls, and by the mouths of their representatives in Congress, some of the States declare, in distinct terms, that an act of Congress forbidding the ntroduction of slavery into the territories of the United States will be followed by a dissolution of the

On the other hand, the people of the free states, in the same mode of manifesting public opinion, have made known their intention of opposing, calmly deliberately, but firmly, the farther extension o

Do the friends of restriction claim the exercise of any new unusual power? Two years before the nor more than five, new states were to be forn On the passage of that ordinance, eight states voted. Five of them, -Delaware, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia-were slave states, and the vote of those five states was unanimous in its favor. May not that vote be regarded as a manifestetion of what were the views of the representatives of those five states in regard to the future and farther extension of slavery? Let their conduct and views be compared with the attitude and language of the representatives and people of several of the same five states now, when a similar question is under discussion.—The contrast is quite remarkable. On one side of this question is the clear and une-quivocal language of the Constitution, giving to Congress the power to "make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States;" the great principles of the ordinance of 1787, reasserted and adopted by many acts of Congress under the Constitution, approved and sustained by the most illustrious statesman of the republic in every part of the Union, and the principles of eternal right and justice. On the other side, is the institution of slavery, which de-prives man of his inalienable rights, effaces from him the image of his Maker, and degrades him to the condition of a thing, a chattel. Massachusetts, come what may, will be faithful to the Constitution and the Union. Her patriotic statesmen helped make that Constitution, and her citizens agreed to and adopted it. She would not knowingly withold or violate any right secured by it to any citizen or section of the country.

Her opinions upon the subject of slavery have been known to the world from the time of the declaration of independence to the present time. As a member of the Union, she is content to leave slavery where it is left by the Constitution, that is, within the limits of those States, where it exists .-

Whilst it is clear that Congress has no right to pass over the limits of a state to interfere with the institution of slavery within it, it is equally clear that no State has the right to push the institution beyond its own limits into and over the territory of the Union where it does not exist.

Entertaining no doubt of the constitutional power of Congress to exclude slavery from its own territories, and believing that such exclusion is demanded by the highest principles of morality and justice, she never can consent to its extension over one foot of territory where it now is not. If the
