He tossed his cap up in greeting. "Coming down?" he asked. "I'll catch you, if you are." "No, thanks," snapped Moya undeniably enough. "I'm not going to break my neck just to please you." "Oh, if you jump into a hole," he retorted airily, "I'll pull you out. It would not be the first time you asked me to pull you out of a hole." "It was not the most pleasant memory to Moya. She winced. Barry had scored once. "You're rather fond of holes," inquired Barry. "Aren't you? And dragging other people into them. I say, Moya, are you coming down the cliff, or shall I climb up?" "I don't want you," she declared uninvitingly. "I came out for a walk by myself." "But that won't do," expostulated Barry with mock gravity. "Won't do at all. It will create quite a

"Seeing how you asked me to help you out of a difficulty, and I did. And this is all I get for my generosity?" "I can't help it," cried Moya contentedly. "And I dare say you feel just the same, only you won't own it. I feel as if I had lost all my freedom and liberty of action." "You can get it back," he broke in quickly upon her. "Any moment you like." "I dare not," she said, and her voice sharpened, there was a note of fear in it. "No, I can't. We must go on, Barry—must until Guy has gone away, at least." "But why?" he demanded, pointing blankly. "Because of your matter? She seems to approve of me more lately. I fancy she's not so keen on the estimable Guy now she's seen him. But why, Moya? It seems to me all the reason for pretence is gone now. There's no reason to keep it up any longer." "Oh, there is, there is," she protested hurriedly, and still there was that fear in her voice.

scandal if we go for solitary walks when we ought by rights to be strolling along arm-in-arm together. And I can't stand here shouting up to you sweet nothings that I ought to be whispering in your ear. It's most terribly unromantic, and it hurts my sense of the fitness of things." "It's all so romantic," agreed Moya with a snarl, and added: "You've such a fine sense of the fitness of things. I've noticed that before." "Barry ignored that." "Oh, the place and time are all right," he said. "The sea and sky and sand, most romantic. What are you frowning like a thunderstorm for, Moya? You spoil the picture." "She did not attempt to enlighten him. He went on teasingly: "This is rather like Romeo and Juliet in the balcony scene, isn't it? Only Juliet did not scowl on Romeo as you do on me."

Strong Women

By Dr. Valentine Mott.

Women and men too are just as strong and healthy as their blood. Vigor and health come with good blood. Without good red blood a woman has a weak heart and poor nerves.

In the spring is the best time to take stock of one's condition. If the blood is thin and watery, face pale or pimply, if one is tired and listless, generally weak, a Spring Tonic should be taken. An old-fashioned herbal remedy that was used by nearly everybody 50 years ago is still safe and sane because it contains no alcohol or narcotic. It is made of roots and herbs and called Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. If druggists do not keep it in tablet form, send 50 cents for a vial to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel in Buffalo, N. Y.

offered your freedom, you won't take it! What do you want, I wonder?" "To be alone!" she cried defiantly, driven to desperation, and when Barry had gone on along the sands, she blinked away blinding tears that made his tall figure dance up and down fantastically, and sea and sky dissolve to a shining mist. "What do you want? Moya did not know. But there was no doubt Barry was horribly unsympathetic. Now Guy, in like circumstances, would have understood at once—there yet Guy, of all people, must never, never be told. Just because he would understand only too well."

"No, I shan't come," pronounced Moya decidedly. "I've an awful headache. And it's much too hot for walking. And, most of all, I want to be by myself." This last accompanied a flash of dark eyes Barry-ward. If he considered it his duty to stay with her, a broad grin would unceasingly have been on his face. "Inevitable thing!" he scoffed. "You'll be sorry you have not come with us. They give one ripping tea at the Old Maids' Inn—such cream and eggs and jam! No headache could be proof against it. You won't? Ah, well, the loss is yours. Au revoir."

CHAPTER V. "No, I shan't come," pronounced Moya decidedly. "I've an awful headache. And it's much too hot for walking. And, most of all, I want to be by myself." of old follies, old mistakes, a wiping out of faltering, straying footprints—a new, unmarked, untroubled page for the future to write what it pleased. "I can't," Moya sighed as if in answer. "I've made foolish steps I can't retrace—that nothing will blot out. I only wish it could. I've made mistakes that no breeze of the turning tide can blow away, but no crystal-clear little waves can wash away and erase. It's no use my coming." "What did you say?" a voice asked. And she started. Guy Berkeley had come noiselessly over the thick lawn grass. Moya sat upright in her garden chair. "Did you say it was no use going? But I thought you had gone." "No, I didn't go with the others. I had a headache, and wanted to rest. But I thought you had gone." Guy threw himself down on the grass. "I went up to the station," he said, "to see about my train tomorrow. I wasn't sure as to the time. The trains were altered this month, you know, and I had not got the new time-table. They've struck off some of the fastest trains, it seems."

ASTHMA CURED TO STAY CURED

THOUSANDS TESTIFY TO THE LASTING BENEFIT SECURED FROM

CATARRHOZONE

CURES WITHOUT DRUGS

One of the finest discoveries in medicine was given to the public when "Catarrhose" was placed on the market about fifteen years ago. Since then thousands have been cured of asthma and catarrh. An interesting case is reported from Calgary in a letter from Crighton E. Thompson, who says: "Nothing too strong can be said for Catarrhose. I suffered four years from asthma in a way that would beggar description. I went through everything that man could suffer. I was told of Catarrhose by a clerk in Findlay's drug store and purchased a dollar package. It was worth hundreds to me in a week, and I place a priceless value on it. I benefit it every since derived. I strongly urge every sufferer to use Catarrhose for Asthma, Bronchitis and Catarrh."

The one-dollar package lasts two months; small size, 50c; sample size, 25c; all storekeepers and druggists, or the Catarrhose Co., Kingston, Canada.

returning to town to-morrow." She made no comment, not even a politely-conventional murmur of regret. And he gave a strained laugh. "You don't say you're sorry," he said. Then he took one look into her eyes. "I believe you're really glad!" he said, and his voice changed.

For in the first moment gladness had been her uppermost feeling. He was going! This mistaken, foolish chapter of life was closing. No more need for pretence, for the deception that started in joke but had become so irksome. Moya called up words to her lips.

"Oh, no, I'm not," she averred hastily. "I'm awfully sorry you're going. We'll all be there. Especially the boys. You're such a hero of theirs. Besides, I did not know you would go so soon."

She was painfully conscious that her sentences were jerky and unconvincing.

"It's not so soon," said Guy. "I've stayed here a long time—much longer than I intended. But now—it's no use my staying."

His voice suddenly sounded dragging and weary. Moya glanced at him.

"I don't think," she said abruptly, "that you've had enough holiday yet—that you're sufficiently rested. You look worn and tired. Not fit to start work again. Must you go?"

A strange flash deepened his grey eyes. "Yes," he said shortly. "I must—I must!"

He got up, and paced the small lawn, walking restlessly to and fro. Moya watched him. Usually there was a quiet, strong repose in his manner. It was lacking now. He came back and looked down at her. "Work!" he said. "It's the one thing for me now. I always gave my life to my work. I found it easy to do so; it satisfied me. It must do so now."

"I know your work is everything to you," said Moya. "And it's such splendid work." There was a regretful note in her voice now. He was going away, and she would hear no more of that work, have no more insight into this new stirring life, so full of all life really meant, or should mean—self-denial, upward and onward progress. She had just glimpsed this life, and it had opened to her a world of new things.

"Oh, I wish," she exclaimed involuntarily, "that I could do some such work, too. I feel my life so empty—so purposeless."

He stood there looking down at her, but he said nothing at once.

"Empty?" he said then, and there was an odd note in the word. "But your life should be full."

She suddenly understood his meaning, and her face flushed. How nearly she had betrayed herself. There was trouble in his eyes, she saw it, and turned away her own. He was questioning her silently. Did he, too, like Una, guess at misunderstanding between her and Barry?

"Your life should be full," said Guy. "When life is not yours? You have everything before you."

"Oh, I don't mean that," she interrupted. "But it's all so aimless. You have an aim in life. It means so much to you. Ah, sometimes I almost wish you had not come. Because you have made me see how petty and small and unimportant my life is. You have made me dissatisfied with myself. And now you are going!"

He was going. He, who alone could teach her to make of that life, so aimless and useless, something full and satisfying. She had spoken impulsively, out of her inmost heart, without weighing her words. But she stopped at the look on his face.

"Yes, I'm going," he said. "Child—why do you say all this? You know why I'm going."

"No—why?" breathed Moya, but even as she spoke she knew. The real reason why Guy was going. It was written in his eyes, in their flash, and in their deepening, and, above all, in their pain.

Poisoned By Gas While In a Well

FRANK CARLSON FOUND RELIEF IN DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Saskatchewan Man Who Suffered All Summer Claims That His New Lease of Health Is Due to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Liveston, Sask., May 24th. (Special.) "Most enthusiastic about the benefit I have received from using Dodd's Kidney Pills is Mr. Frank Carlson, a well-known and highly respected resident of this place." "I was gassed in a well on my farm 25 feet deep," Mr. Carlson says. "I was nearly dead. I was treated for a whole summer for my trouble, but did not get better." "Then I read in a little almanac about Dodd's Kidney Pills. I had no idea they might benefit me, but was willing to try anything. To my surprise the improvement in my general health was so great, and my kidneys were so much better, that I feel like advising everybody to use Dodd's Kidney Pills. I would not be without them."

Dodd's Kidney Pills are a kidney remedy. They strengthen the kidneys and enable them to do their full work of straining the impurities out of the blood.

Ask your neighbors if Dodd's Kidney Pills are not the sovereign remedy for sick kidneys.

GOOD REASON.

Mrs. Worriess was a very witty lady. "What fine dark hair you have got, Mrs. Worriess. My wife, who is much younger than you, has her hair quite grey." "I rejoined the lady, "and if I had been your wife my hair would no doubt, have been grey, too."

NEW YEAR'S IN CHINA

All Debts Are Paid and the Country "Painted Red."

New Year is the national joy day in China. All accounts must be squared up at that time, and the man who can't raise money enough to pay his debts has to go into bankruptcy. The laws are such that the creditor can enter the debtor's house and take what he pleases—there is no settlement. To prevent such action families club together and make all sorts of compromises to keep up the business reputation of the clan.

New Year's is a great day for the pawnbrokers. Their shops are crowded with people who want to redeem their best clothes before the new year. There are crowds, also, who want to pawn other things in order to get money to pay their debts. Pawnbrokers receive high rates of interest, in which they are protected by the government.

The Chinese paint the whole country red, figuratively speaking on New Year's day in more senses than one. Red is the color which with them denotes good luck and prosperity and all the New Year cards and invitations are on paper of that color. Every child gets its New Year's present wrapped in red paper, and red inscriptions are pasted over the doors of the houses. New pictures of Chinese generals are put on the front doors and the houses are scoured and made clean.

Wives and Mothers Need Not Have Sore Backaches

Constantly on their feet, attending to the wants of a large and exacting family, women often break down with nervous exhaustion.

In the stores, factories, and on a farm are weak, ailing women, dragged down with torturing backache and bearing down pains.

Such suffering isn't natural, but it's dangerous, because due to diseased kidneys.

The dizziness, insomnia, and other symptoms of kidney complaint can cure themselves, they require the assistance of Dr. Hamilton's Pills which go direct to the seat of the trouble.

To give vitality and power to the kidneys, to lend aid to the bladder and liver, to free the blood of poisons, probably there is no remedy so successful as Dr. Hamilton's Pills. For all womanly irregularities their merit is well known.

Because of their mild soothing and healing affect, Dr. Hamilton's Pills are safe, and are recommended for girls and women of all ages. 25c per box at all dealers. Refuse any substitute for Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Man-drake and Butternut.

THE KAKA.

A Nightmare Bird of New Zealand

Perhaps in no country in the world are strange forms of bird life more pronounced than in New Zealand, says a writer in Chambers' Journal. The kaka, a parrot of nocturnal habits, is seldom seen, even on moonlight nights, yet as soon as the twilight and sudden dusk of the Southern Hemisphere sets in the night is full of its shrill, piercing cries as it wings its way to and from its favorite feeding grounds. Its harsh screams suggest uncanny proceedings up among the clouds.

One great brown kaka, which had been tamed, possessed an almost fiendish intelligence and a capacity for mischief that only a small monkey could equal. The bird constituted itself the chief torment of a small girl who lived in the neighborhood. At twilight it would fly over to the child's home and seek her through every room until it found her, then, watching for an unguarded moment, it would fly to her shoulder and nip her ear with a powerful beak. The scream of pain would be echoed by a wild whoop of delight as the bird flew down to await another chance. The very sound of its pattering feet on the verandah would send the child seeking frantically for safety behind locked doors, while the kaka sat patiently on the doormat until some one seized it and carried it off. It never attacked anyone else in the same way, and it must simply have been amused by the child's terror. Although the bird pattered all over the garden and house from early twilight until ten o'clock at night, it would vanish mysteriously the instant the clock struck, so that it should not be locked in its cage. It was quite friendly with the numerous animals and would visit the duck yard and waddle up and down.

It never attempted to touch the ducklings or the cats and kittens, but it would leap to pieces every shrike, and, if it could manage to do so, it would bite through the window frames in the night and leave the glass in fragments on the ground. It would push cups and saucers to the edge of the table and knock them off just to hear them crash on the floor. It fully realized what it was doing, and it would screech with delight. "Another kaka loved to walk, and it would follow its owner about like a small dog. It was fond of climbing the blue-gum trees in the garden, and no calling would make it come down; but the sight of some one opening the gate would bring it down scrambling, for it dearly loved a walk in the twilight. One of its favorite tricks was to enter the house quietly and remain hidden until the middle of prayers, when it would fly to its owner's shoulder with a startling screech. It loved to catch hold of anything that was being shaken, and it would sit on a sack almost asking to have it dragged over the ground. At night, when it grew dissatisfied with its own quarters, it would drive a dog from its kennel and take possession of it. This kaka was generally very quiet, but sometimes it called to its relatives as they flew past; and one day, when it was about 18 months old, it flew off to join them and never returned.

A MOTHER'S ADVICE

Once a mother has used Baby's Own Tablets for her little ones she is always happy to recommend them to others. Her advice, given after a careful trial, can be readily followed with assured good results. The Tablets are a mild but thorough laxative which never fail to regulate the bowels and sweeten the stomach. They always do good—they cannot possibly do harm even to the youngest babe. Concerning them Mrs. P. Laforet, St. Nazaire, Que., writes:—"For three months my baby was constipated and cried continually. On the advice of a friend I gave him Baby's Own Tablets, and now at the age of five months he is perfectly well and weighs twenty pounds. I am delighted to be able to advise other mothers to use them." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Plain Omelette

One-half cupful of butter, one cupful of flour, one egg and one-half cupful of sugar, one egg.

Cream the butter and sugar, add egg yolks well beaten, half a cupful of milk or water, flour sifted with a quarter teaspoonful of baking powder, then fold in the beaten whites of the eggs and flavor.

This can be variously treated by adding chocolate, apples, baking in layers with an orange cream filling, adding strong coffee instead of the water or milk and chopped nuts for a delicious nut loaf, or raisins and nutmeg to be eaten without frosting.
