AN INDEPENDENT OPINION.

"There appears to be conclusive evidence that election fraud has been win Smith's paper, the Sun. Proceeding the same journal observes :-

The case is one which called for vigprous action on the part of the gov- fame. ernment. Had a bank been robbed in North Grey the provincial detectives would have been sent immediately to the scene with instructions to investigate the case and run down the guilty parties. The face that the case has a political bearing affords, in our opinion, no reason why equally strong action should not have been taken in regard to it. When Sir Oliver Mowat took office as minister of justice at Ottawa in 1896 charges of election frauds in Manitoba were laid before him. He issued no commission of inquiry, but, in conjunction with Hon. Clifford Sifton, then attorney-general of Manitoba, a force of detectives was set at work and thousands of dollars were spent in rounding up the nanipmlators. A course similar to the one taken by a Liberal government against ballot manipulators working on behalf of the Conservative party should be taken by the Ontario government against a manipulator or manipulators operating on behalf of the Liberal party. Yet the governmerely sends up an old gentleman to make inquiries. As well might soldiers be sent to fight with blank cartridges. For the crimes committed in West Elgin and North Waterloo not a single individual was punished. We cannot afford to let the same result follow in North Grey. Ballot manipulators is one of the most dangerous crimes it is possible to commit against the state. The importance of punishing The rises above all party considerations, and all the resources of the province should be used, and used with the utmost vigor to secure the pun-

The Ottawa Citizens says:-Canadians did not do it all. This confession, frequently made in these columns the Citizen is constrained to renew in the presence of the London despatches of yesterday's date. The Official Gazette publishes another instalment of Lord Roberts' field despatches, Written when he was in commend in (the field. From it we quote:-

Lord Roberts speaks highly of the Canadian contingent, especially in connection with the unsecessful attack on Cookson's camp on March 31, 1900, in which he says the Canadian Mounted rifles sustained the heaviest loss of the day. He particularly comments on the gallantry of Lieut, Bruce Carruthers. Was it coincidence only that two years later to a day the same Lieut. Bruce Carruthers once more gallantly led his little band of Canadians in withstanding a force that outnumbered it 7 to 1, at Hart's river, where the defiant No Surrender of the lieutenant found echo in the daring of Pte Evans who broke his rifle ere he died that it might not fall into the enemy's Mands! Yet this is the tale we love to read, cold in the official Gazette-In another despatch, dated March 31 (1902), in which he refers to the action at Brackspruit, Lord Kitchener praises highly the gallant stand made in this engagement by a handful of Canadians in an isolated position. Refering to this matter Lord Kitchener remarks:-"There have been few finer instan ces of heroism in the whole course of the campaign." No, Canadians did not do all the fighting in South Africa, nor earn all the honors of the Campaign. Nor do we know that our boys loved the Flag more dearly than others, or cared less what became of themselves so long as the best traditions of the British service were maintained and the unity of the Empire preserved; but we

Dry, moist, scaly tetter, all forms of eczema or salt rheum, pimples and other cutaneous eruptions proceed from humors, either inherited, or acquired through defective digestion and assimilation.

To treat these eruptions with drying medicines is dangerous.

The thing to do is to help the system discharge the humors, and strengthen it against their return. Hood's Sarsaparilla permanently cured J. G. THE LESSON OF A TRAGEDY, New York Tribune.

The moral of the escapade which resulted in the death of a young woman at Good Ground a few days ago seems almost too obvious to draw. Yet nobody who contemplates the growing carelessness in manners and morals of young men and young women in decent society can fail to realize that the lesson is greatly needed. A recent murder brought to light a most appalling account of the social condition among the sons and daughters of well-to-do and respectable families in the Bedford region of Brooklyn, and must have awakened thousands of fathers and mothers too late to a sense of duty. This latest tragedy is another indictment of the lack of training in the elements of good sense and good breeding of parents, from whom such training might reasonably be expected.

The victim in this instance was a young woman of respectable parentage and good social position. She was apparently a fun-loving, wilful, but not vicious girl. Yet she accepted for her close companions at a summer resort two young married men, one of whom was separated but not divorced from his wife. Her mother disliked such companionship, and the evening before the tragedy told the man living apart from his wife that she did not approve of his relations with her daughter, only to have the daughter saucily remark in the mother's presence that he could go with her as much as he pleased. Then she went riding with this man, and was about with the two, at hotels, in carriages or boats, till the middle of the night, while her mother was abed. During that night something mysterious happened. The girl and one man were accidentally drowned or were murdered, and the other man has disappeared. There is in the newspaper paper accounts no hint of suspicions against this girl's good character, but her indiscretion, her reckless readiness to compromise herself, and the apparent inability of her parents to exercise wholesome influence upon her are as sadly conspicuous as we fear they are typical. Fathers and mothers who permit their girls to grow up so beyond their control, so ignorant or so indifferent to the requirements of womanly be havior, have no cause for wonder if the result is death or moral ruin. The traditional freedom and naturalness of American social relations have charm and a value when under proper training they are made to promote in both boys and girls mutual respect and unaffected modesty. Doubtless, too, that unchaperoned companionship of young people which so shocks for eigners results for the most part in virtuous affections and happy marriages. But this is something far different from the license and disregard of decorum which is becoming alarmingly prevalent, not among the lower orders in the social scale, but families which are considered intelligent and well bred. The manners of young men have degenerated. They will act and speak in the presence of women in a way that would not have been tolerated a generation ago, and young women who are unquestionably without evil intent will conduct themselves as no woman could have done a few years ago without serious damage to her reputation. There is evidently need of a revival of the unfashionable art of bringing up chil-Boys and girls are growing up dren. to be lawless. Lacking respect for authority and contentions, they easily authority and conventions seek to guard. Laxity in homes and schools, contact under unfavorable conditions of young men and women in business life, the rush, selfishness and bad manners of our crowded streets, shops and public conveyances, all tend to the destruction of that good breeding which commands respect and nurtures modesty.
