OUR CANDIDATES.

SIR.—In sending Messrs. Cameron and Gibbons to both Houses of Parliament, the Riding is only sending the right men to the right places. In sending a man to Parliament it is almost needless to say that he should be a qualified person, for every elector in the riding knows this. But I very much fear that the general term "qualification" is to a considerable extent misunderstood and consequently greatly misapplied. It is very true that the law requires a certain property qualification, fitting a member for parliament. But it is no less equally true that the same law leaves it with the people to supply the necessary talent and experience required for so important an office. Now, there is in almost every constituency a certain few, who are endowed with a large property qualification on the part of a member to represent them, also another few who are equally endowed with an intelligent and business man and there, too, are some who look not beyond any one or ruining them, but a couple Aunts' men, it is hardly worth while to say, that we claim no connection with either of those parties, for we consider one and all of such men as they choose, to be unqualified for the office already stated. But, if we find the required amount of property, the talent and experience, and the honesty of purpose, all centered in one man, we say, that is the man for us, and we believe we have got them in the person of Messrs. Cameron and Gibbons now before the people for election. In saying this for these Gentlemen, we are aware that it goes somewhat in the teeth of certain things that have been said and wrote by opponents especially about the latter gentleman, Mr. Gibbons. It is not during the heat and strife of an electioneering contest where men's passions are in a manner loose to say or to do any thing, it is not then entirely that we form our opinion of the fitting qualifications of a member for parliament. No it is rather in the usual quiet course of events that have preceded. It is to the past history of Mr. Gibbons we look to find what he really is. During a long course of years we find that he has been a very prominent and public man, in the United Counties of Huron and Bruce, filling steadily for many of these years the highest offices required of any man in connection with either Town or County, and we must certainly take this as a proof of his worth and fitness for the same, and if so fit to preside over fifty men in a County Council it is surely a great stride towards being prepared to do so for seventy in order to preside over eighty men in the Ontario Legislature, it was said of Mr. Gibbons by his opponent at a certain political meeting that Mr. Gibbons was known as a pugnacious or fighting man. To be as charitable as possible, we don't think that the person who who said this, meant to say that it was fisty work, but which ever way, it was said with the view to depreciate the worth of Mr. Gibbons in the minds of the electors, but the aim was missed, for instead of depreciating, sensible electors took it as a high compliment paid, it showed that he (Mr. Gibbons) had a mind—a judgment and opinions of his own, which if occasion required he could do battle manfully for, not with fists, however, but with the well levelled aim of argument. This very propensity, if we can call it such, is considered to be an indispensible qualification for a member of parliament. We require to send a man there who will grapple with and do away with all corruption and wrong doing, who will see there is no extravagance—no waste—and no manipulations of Public funds by Prime Minister or any other Minister in connection with the government of Canada, but that there be a close and economical use of the same. On reading the expenditure of our public funds for the last number of years—the purpose for which money has been paid and to whom paid, we are amazed in our mind at the great incapacity and want of right principle in some of our public men who have been in a special degree under the care and guidance of our present Premier. We think that to confidence with these men in the government of a country with the purse chest beside them is to go into running temptation, it is like waiting into a fire and think not to be burned, which it is most absurd. In entering this Next Election, if with reason to grow and prosper in her Agriculture, in her commerce and in her manufactures, to be standing on the right hand and on the left, we must in this case see that we have men at the helm of affairs, who are actuated by right principles, men who are unselfish, who are patriotic in all their movements, men who instead of looking to offices for emoluments, are ready to accept them (when occasion requires) their time, their wealth even to their all, for with such men as these we may then rest satisfied of the onward prosperity of our County, for the next ten years, and for many years, but for generations yet to come.

Electors of the South Riding of Huron if this be your wish as already dissolved, rally then round the polls on the 6th and 7th of September and extend your votes for Messrs. Cameron and Gibbons.

A REFORMER.

Exeter Aug. 31st 1867.

Letter from London.

[From our own Correspondent.]

London Aug. 31 1867.

Saturday night—cloudy, dreary, and cold. Splendid weather for electioneering, and very prolific in producing consumption. The main streets are quiet enough, but the by-streets and lanes are crowded with Irish. It would be better to name "Irish Streets," (your correspondent thinks the title). As it is usual for the "youth and beauty" of the town to go forth on pay and be seen, on Saturday night, my thoughts naturally were towards Dundas street, and I imagine I see the thousand-and-one strangers and disembarkations, pills and specifics, &c., &c., that present evening of last month. Those are found—in the prime of life, thoughtless and gay.

The most noticeable object in throng are the garrison officers; who do all in their power to make themselves conspicuous. Here are three of them taking their evening walk. Their style and dress is reminiscent of the extreme. Three abreast are awe-inspiring, the common toilet stand aside to let them pass. Like an ancient candle-stick for three candles, the tallest taker centre. Mr. Tall wears a bob-tail coat, outgrown by him many years since, drawers of the three-buttoned bag style stuffed into striped stockings which are again placed in shoes of the most fantastic appearance, pinched and pointed and to cap all the three. On either side of his head he combs his white, fair hair, which is by the way far too small for him, and crushed in white beaver. He wears a massive gold chain, and his fingers would be a torture to many. As eyeglass is an indispensable article with him and, ever and anon, he places it to his eye to take a better survey of a certain Miss Brown across the way to pass. The other young officer wears somewhat similar style of cloth, but not a relation, for his coat is single breasted. He would be immediately recognized as a Scotchman, for he wears a tartan scarf and Glengarry cap. The other is a fair description of the garrison officers of the first class; they carry half-a-quill "cutter," with a cane, hazy, shabby frock coat, and a face, and head unlike any other. All shades, sizes, and debts, talk loud and audaciously, and are "splendid swells."

Here are two of the ladies of the garrison; the officers are splendid but these are "splendider." One in imitation of the great Napoleon sports an extensive tuft, which in honor of the Emperor has been called "Napoleon tuft" the other following a late caprice of the wonderful fashion-tailor has constructed to the measurements of stays and economy, and they find the general public thinking of establishing an "Ecclesiastical" that Volunteer against which in the form of last year carried the country of the day. We almost think his lordship would have given the benefit of his patronage to the inventive and ended their meeting; there would be the rebellious fleer at the end of such a speech, it should not be forgotten that the Hon. Mr. MacDougall was once an object at almost like end, and had materially assisted in demolishing such men as Michael Foley out of office. He had been reported of late, Mr. C. Gibbons had changed his ground repeatedly during the canvass, making a different speech at every meeting—unlike Mr. Ritchie, who stuck to the same thing, speech after speech, and by the same means succeeded in securing a majority. Complaints were made that Mr. Ritchie was not in the country, when he was opposed on Confederation, but if their constituents found he was conscientiously opposed to it, they were the last to censure him, for they were opposed to it themselves. If their constituents found he was conscientiously opposed to it, they were the last to censure him, for
