Unashamed!

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

Most women would have made themselves and me thoroughly uncomfortable with a flood of excuses and apologies.

Taking the Sting Out of a Trying Situation.

Not so my hostess. She put her iron down, came forward with a cordial greeting and seated me, before she uttered a word of explanation. Then she simply called her little boy to remove the ironing board and put the chairs in place, saying pleasantly and without a trace of embarrassment, "I've just finished ironing a shirt for my husband. The laundry didn't come for some reason and he discovered to-night he had none. This is the only room where I can have a place to attach my electric iron and still have a light."

Then she changed the subject. She wasn't ashamed. She evidently had no sense of being caught, and by her unembarrassed manner she took the sting of awkwardness out of the situation and left me without any feeling of having come at an inopportune time.

"I Cannot Afford That."

There are few qualities I admire more than this poise, this freedom from narrow embarrassment, this perfect unembarrassed way, "I cannot afford that?" I consider that with that fine poise, that splendid unembarrassment, they are richer far than if they could afford the thing ten times over.

It always gives me a thrill of admiration when I hear anyone say in a perfectly unembarrassed way, "I cannot afford that?" I consider that with that fine poise, that splendid unembarrassment, they are richer far than if they could afford the thing ten times over.

Of all the stories they tell of Abraham Lincoln I like that one best in which he is described as playing leap frog with his small son when an important minister of state came to call. His wife was much disturbed but Lincoln himself calmly rose from his knees, brushed the dust from his trousers, and without effort or visible assumption of dignity but by pure force and worth of character became at once the great President of the United States, ready to handle the destinies of millions.

Poise of manner is a great help when you are not sure of the right convention.

Look As If You Knew and People Will Think You Do.

I have seen people who lack this poise do the right thing with such an air of uncertainty and embarrassment that they appeared ignorant and awkward. And I have seen others do the wrong thing with such poise and serenity that they made it seem right and proper.

Indeed, manners and customs are established by people like this who have the air that makes whatever they do seem right and desirable.

Trust yourself and others will trust you. Respect and believe in yourself and others will respect and believe in you.

Inspector General Decorated.

Yesterday afternoon before the opening of the Legislature, Inspector General John Sullivan was presented with the King's Police Medal by His Excellency the Governor. In making the presentation, His Excellency congratulated Mr. Sullivan on his long and valuable service to the King, and in wishing him many years to wear the medal, felt that he was but voicing the sentiments of the whole public. The charming little theatre was always clean and cosy. The films the finest; the dear little singer is more than good; the costumes lovely; the music delightful; while the price is right. The big crowds attending all the time testify to all this.

HARRY LAUDER'S SALMON.

An interesting incident in connection with the visit of Mr. Harry Lauder to Aberdeen occurred at His Majesty's Theatre, Aberdeen, where he is fulfilling an engagement. Fishing on the Dee, near Banchory, on the previous day, Mr. Lauder was successful in landing a couple of salmon, and these were put up to auction, on the Dutch system, in the course of the performance on Wednesday night, the proceeds in the one case going to the National Relief Fund and in the other to Mr. Duncan Davidson's hospital at Inchmarlo. The first salmon realized a sum of £8 10s. and the other £7, one of the bidders for the latter being Mr. Lauder himself, who kept up a running fire of humorous comment while the auctions were in progress.

"I always get rattled when I see a woman crossing the street ahead of me," said the first motorist. "So do I," replied the second ditto. "They wear such a lot of pins in their hats and hair that if a fellow collides with them he is almost sure to puncture a tire."

The Rev. R. J. Tacon, Rector of Rollesby, Norfolk, GB, has four sons on active service. The Rev. Edward Phillips, of Checkley, Staffordshire, has five sons in the Army. Soldiering runs in families in Checkley, for three families have together given sixteen men to the colors.

A correspondent writes: "If you are killed why you are killed," says Tommy, "and what's the use of worrying about it. The more you worry the better it pleases the Germans." Statement of the Newfoundland Patriotic

The objects of the Fund are to raise the piece of money which is understood to be provided by the State for the defenders who pay such total disablement, or for other dependents of those who lose their lives while in the service.

The objects of the Fund are as stated in the original public, is "that it will be primarily in making the dependent relatives of those who undertake to fight the country and the Empire at sea, and afterwards to the subjects connected therewith deemed desirable."

It having been represented would be well if this statement of the objects of the Fund were that there might be no loss of money as to the purpose of the money was to be utilized in the Association referred to in the terms of the Patriotic Fund.

1. To augment, if possible, the success of the family and the Reservists who have a service, where such are unable to adequately maintain their lives while on active service, or otherwise.

2. To assist, if possible, in the secure employment, or in making provision for the other dependents of those who lose their lives while on active service, until they become the legislative enactment.

3. To afford help, if possible, in cases as do not come within the scope of the legislative enactment, but have a moral claim upon the sympathy of the public.

As a more detailed statement of the effects of these objects of value in making clear to the public what is intended, this document has been prepared with respect to it, and it elaborates the same.

With respect to the first object set out, help is being given to families of Volunteers and where such families are in this course the Newfoundland Patriotic Fund is pursuing the same.
