Labor Men in the Trenches.

THE NEED FOR MUNITIONS.

The Press Bureau has issued the report of the Newcastle deputation of trade union representatives (selected by the National Advisory Committee on War Output), on their visit to the front, September 3-6. The signatories are Fr. John White, Mr. Joshua Butterworth, Mr. Isaac D. Hebron, and Mr. J. N. Bell.

The report says:—
 In presenting the impressions gained on a visit to the front it is a little difficult to know what ought to be included and what ought to be left out. For instance, we have all heard of France having been denuded of its young men, who are all in the fighting ranks, and in repeating that statement we may be charged with merely circulating very stale news. But there is considerable scepticism in the minds of many people. To such people, and especially those in the ranks of Labour, the confirmation of such a statement by officials and members of Trade Unions, responsible at all times to the organizations with which they are connected, may be of some value.

As we went round we received many statements as to the need for more shells. The officers in particular were strong upon the necessity of a more adequate supply of ammunition of all kinds, and upon the need for the people at home dropping all differences and uniting upon the work of keeping the Army supplied with every kind of munitions of war. There seemed to be a strong feeling about the alleged shortcomings of the workmen at home, and statements were made to us in that connection that we did not always feel we could allow to go unchallenged. We were particularly asked to explain as to the reasons for the Welsh coal strike, regarding which we, as North countrymen, could give very little information.

During this, our first day's experience, we received ample confirmation of what we had so often heard before, viz., of the existence of an opinion amongst responsible men that, man for man, our soldiers are superior to the Germans. Every officer who spoke to us on the point unhesitatingly asserted that, individually, our men could more than hold their own with the Germans, and that, therefore, the great thing that was needed was a sufficient supply of the munitions of war to enable our soldiers to meet the Germans on an equal footing.

The report describes a visit to a military convalescent home, where soldiers who are out of health, although not completely broken down, and soldiers only slightly wounded, are bathed, clothed, and have their ailments attended to:—

Since December over 10,000 men who might have been, and who would otherwise, in many cases, have been lost to the Army, have been restored to health and sent back to the ranks. We could not help expressing to Col. Bate, who is responsible for this wonderful piece of organization, the hope that when the war was over the authorities might see their way to allow him to do a similar work for civilians at home.

We may sum up the impressions that we formed:—

(1) We would comment upon the good will that prevails between officers and men. Of this there cannot be the least doubt. It can be seen in the tone and attitude of the officers and in the bearing of the men in their presence—to say nothing of other evidence.

(2) We may mention the cheerful confidence as to the final result of the war, which was characteristic of all ranks.

(3) Whatever there may have been in the past there seems to be splendid organization to-day.

(4) There seems to be a sufficiency of food.

(5) Life in the trenches, even under the best conditions possible, must be frightfully trying. It is bad enough to work amid dirt and wet, but when in addition to these there is a watchful enemy constantly on the look-out for the opportunity to take his opponent's life, the nerves and physique of the strongest must, some day, show signs of the strain.

(6) Despite every disadvantage our fighting men only ask that, as they are loyal to us, we at home shall be loyal to them, and see that no act of ours hampers, even in the slightest degree, the supply, in ever-increasing quantities, of shell and every kind of munition of war. Without these success is impossible, but with them, if we may judge from the expressions of those best able to form a judgment, success is assured.

DETAILS OF GOOD GROOMING.

Did you ever stop to consider how important every little detail of the toilet really is? When you sit behind a woman in the street car who has carelessly pinned her collar, do you not long to fix it neatly for her?

Have you not walked behind the woman who, by all outward appearances, is a lady, and suddenly you have seen, perhaps, a bit of braid hanging loosely from her skirt? Have you not been the observer of button-less blouses, hookless gapings and careless back hair?

It is the little things that really count in this world. I have always found that an excellent rule to follow is to dress oneself completely when preparing to go out, and then, just before I step out of the door, I give a quick backward glance in the mirror.

Perhaps a thread has caught on my skirt, perhaps a whisp of hair strays out at the back, or, maybe, there is a tiny hole in the heel of my stocking which I did not notice when dressing or it is possible that I have put too much powder on my nose.

All these details, though trivial, make or mar a beautiful woman. No woman, however beautiful, can afford to be carelessly groomed. The backward glance is an excellent habit and, once you establish it in your mind, you will find lots of flaws in your appearance that you never thought were there.

Fads and Fashions.

Black enamel and rhinestones are combined in many ways in inexpensive jewelry.

Beadings and fur-trimmings are actually seen in the new collar and cuff sets.

The prettiest dresses have their skirts very much rippled and edged with fur.

A little metal embroidery is a pretty feature of some of the new crepe blouses.

White chinchilla coats are so much liked it seems impossible to get enough of them.

The big flappy Tam o' Shaners are among the marked new types in autumn headgear.

Natural cross-fox is among the most beautiful of furs on account of its shaded browns.

Charming Cossack boots are made of African brown leather ornamented and topped with fur.

Midnight blue leather boots with gray fur tops are among the prettiest things imaginable.

In some mysterious way the fitted bodices have been made becoming to the average woman.

It looks as if the higher neckwear would be a greater favorite as the season grows colder.

Turbans of colored velvet with ostrich feather tufts are going to be worn with light-colored afternoon frocks.

A pair of bewitching boots are like old-fashioned Hessian boots done in scarlet and black leather.

Russian evening coats of rich brocade with immense borders of fur are delightful and picturesque garments.

Black corduroy is said to be coming in for the shorter sports coats. They should be worn with white skirts.
