 To His Notice. Living all alone at the rear of 550

Richmond street, Lorenzo Winchester Stevens, former bailiff of this city, is credited with the power of miraculous healing, and is said to have effected a dozen or more difficult cures. He says he will be 71 years of age next March, but he does not look to be more than 50, and has not taken any doctor's medicine for twenty years, he claims. His first cure was that of a Simcoe street man, whom, he claims, the doctors in attendance had given up as incurable. The man was suffering with a bad case of gangrene. Discovers His Power.

Mr. Stevens says that when he called on the sick man, who was an old friend, he had no idea that he was going in any way to alter the man's condition. He began to cheer him up and to tell him he was not so bad as he thought. He shook hands with him and held his hand for some time without realizing just what motive was actuating him. After he left the man arose from his bed, and the next day was as well as he had ever been.

All kinds of ailments from stiff necks, toothache, and neuralgia, to have been cured by Mr. Stevens. A local carriagemaker says that he was some chronic stiffness of the neck which had troubled him for a long time. Mr. Stevens says he was born in Westminster Township in 1843. About 28 years ago he left the farm and has since resided in London. For twenty years he was a bailiff of the County of Middlesex. He has a wife and one son living in the city. grain of mustard seed, ye could move the people of the world, he says, lack faith in God. Mr. Stevens objected to immediate publicity being given to the healing power which he claims. He fears that as a result of publicity he might lose his strange power. He declares, however, that his greatest desire is to speak on the important subject of spend the rest of his life in healing the sick. He reads nothing but the daily newspapers. He claims to be well versed in the Bible, and had read widely along spiritualistic lines. He is a violinist and a maker of violins, but in recent years has been supporting himself partly as a collector and partly by carmen and one workman were injured penter work.

Goes Away Cured. Yesterday a man came to him with a distracting attack of neuralgia. After sitting in the humble little home of the healer for a few minutes, the pain suddenly ceased, and he went away cured. The man was an East End vioinist. Laying on of hands and a simple kind of massage is practiced by Mr. Stevens, but he says that his power to be held next week every evening exheal comes to him from God. He claims

> There will be no Sunday car service tomorrow, the street railway company at the time of going to press, not having yet received a copy of the agreement drawn up by City Solicitor T. G. Meredith. The necessary bylaw for the operation of the seven-day service was given its final reading at a meeting of the council last Monday night. A copy of the document was handed to Manager C. B. King, of the London Street Railway Company, on Tuesday morning, with the apparent understanding that the provisions of the proposed agreement contained therein, could be considered from the bylaw, and the agreement would folow later.

But the company determined make no definite move towards the operation of the Sunday service until the agreement itself had been considered by its solicitor, C. H. Ivey. No agreement was forthcoming, and the result is that citizens will have to walk for another Sunday.

City Clerk Samuel Baker stated today that the proposed agreement would probably be given the company this afternoon, in which event Manager King anticipates that the sevenday service will be commenced week from tomorrow

The financial committee of the Children's Aid Society held a meeting on Friday night, when plans were formulated for putting the society on a more sound financial basis. The organization has been in existence for the past twenty years, and while it has not lacked funds, its sources of revenue have been somewhat uncertain. It is felt that the society should have some definite means of knowing what its revenues will be from year to year, and it is likely that a series of newspaper articles will be prepared setting exclusively about Feb. 25.
