CHAMOMILE CORDIAL.

TPHS Cordial, as its name autonories is prepared a tentifically.

By a Member of the Pastime, many Secrety of the at BriJain, from the Flowers of Chamennie and other vagetable ingredients, imposed expressly from Eurisand. Not only as a Tonic does it stand univalled, but its peculiar medicinal virtues have acquired a justly celefinited repairtion, surgassing the farred Sanaaranical, to which, in point of richness of trate and the ore, as well as in practical efficacy, it is incomparably super-

These inestimable virtues, while fully preserved, are more selicately concentrated and developed in the Corbial, which from its transparency and golden colour, resembles Wine, and see seeing to used at discretion. The fixory is fresh and fragrant, and the faste most grateful and mexecutional le, either to the lady, the Temperance advocate, or fastations conneisseur.

Carrians. I duly received and have tried the sample of Compound Chamonile Cardial, which you sent me.

Aware of the manuer in which you prepare it and of the ma-ture and quality of the ingredients which you employ in its man-ifacture, I cannot object to express to you in my writing my opinion of it, which I should not hesitate to do under different encumstances.

I consider it a very elegant Pharmocutical Preparation, re-sceptible of being made exceedingly usual in a dictated as well as therapenical point of view. It will serve as an excel-lent aubitute for much of the trash which is purchased as Wine for the use of invalids; and will also prove in excellent medima for the agreeable conveyance of remedies, which, without some auxiliaries, are often rebelled against and rejected by the sto-mark.

I am, Gentlemen,

Yours. &c.,

Mesata. RESTORD & Co.,

GRILEMEN.—I have received the Sample Bottle of your "Compound Channonile Contail," and consider it a beautiful as well as highly pulstable preparation. The gromatic midpeculiar little flavor, in which lies the essential Medicinal qualities, appear to be largely induced and well preserved; and as this vegetable Tools to highly to action in those forms of Dipenpena, depending on decidity, or want of tone of the digestive organs, the form anost frequently not with on this conflictal your Cordial will, I doubt not, form an inestimable addition to our Pharmacontrol.

From the knowledge possessed by me of Mr. Rexford, and his very high reputation is a Pharmacentical Chemist, I feel match pleasure in considerily teconomicialing his preparation of this valuatio Tonic to my Professional Fire intern, and to the public, as a delightful and invigorating Cordial.

I am, Yours, &c.,

GEORGE HOLME.

Meases. Reveond & Co. Teronto,

GENTLEMEN.—I have no hesitation in expressing to you my professional approbation of your 'Compound Chantomile Cordial." The 'Unite properties of the Flowers of Chantomile, with which it is finely of added, are so mives only acknowledged and the Medicinal qualities of that regetable ingredient so fully admirted in Dysperite complishing, that I consister the idea of administrating it in the pleasing form of a Contal, most happy; and in the case of your preparation, so are cossful, that it eximot fail to be a favorite with the public.
