

PUT YOUR SHOULDER TO THE WHEEL

Our ranks have been decimated and redecimated. This year will most probably find the halls of the red and blue echoing fewer voices than ever. But, though there may be fewer voices to resound through the corridors, that is not sufficient reason for less noise.

"Carry on" is a term much used, but, at such a time, it never becomes trite. In fact, in this the fifth year of the war, the practice of these two simple, meaningful words was never more necessary.

Every man entering college this fall should do so with the intention of maintaining a part of college life. Every talent should be invested to the extent of his ability; in everything he attempts he should exert himself to his utmost. This is required if the various O. A. C. organizations are to retain their present standard.

If there is a rugby team—and there is no reason why there should not be—every man fit to buck the line should step into a uniform and trot out between the goal-posts. This applies to every college and class team. Don't be over-modest, hustle out and try your hardest to bring the best material of the college into action.

If you have a few practical ideas on any agricultural subject, dress them up in words and volunteer the article to the Review. It is a College Magazine by the students and for the students. It is as much your duty to maintain it as it is the editors.

When a debate is announced and you are selected to uphold your year jump with joy at the opportunity. If you are a descendant of Pan exert your efforts towards the welfare of the Philharmonic. Every man should interest himself in Y.M.C.A. work.

There never was any sympathy for the man who is capable and yet does not attempt to excel in anything. If you can't do anything else be a college jester. Laughs are essential and we have lost many of our great fun-makers.

Agriculture is apparently the object of study of everyone at the college. The student listens more or less attentively to lectures on the various subjects essential to a proper knowledge of the great business of farming. Agriculture being extremely compound and the college course, except in the fourth year, very general, many subjects are necessarily neglected.

Thus a man genuinely interested in agriculture is prevented from obtaining as much knowledge or practice in certain subjects as he desires. Even though this were not the case, every man who wishes to reach the top of his profession or business must absorb
