

tion. It is the carrying out of the recommendation of the first salaries committee that the plea for a readjustment of salaries should be placed on two distinct footings: (1) the change in cost of living, and (2) the necessity for a re-valuation of offices in the light of the recent great changes in the service. If the proof of a pudding is in the eating, then the proof of a journal's propaganda is in the definite line of action it advises and the results which that action promises.

What have the critics of The Civilian to offer as against this? Why don't they draw up a definite memorial and let us have a look at it?

The New President.
