

extremity of the island, are the only other points at which this latter formation exhibits itself in Newfoundland.

The Carboniferous series occupies two extensive areas of country, one bordering on the West Coast surrounding the Bay of St. George, the other in the valley of the Humber River. As this series is more particularly referred to under the head of Coal, it is needless to enter into any details here.

