A POOR MAN'S HOUSE

MR. JOHN BUCHAN in the WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"Mr. Reynolds has a remarkable literary gift, but none of the false impressionism which too often accompanies it. He does not go out to seek impressions; they come gladly to seek him. Above all, he has a sympathy which is a kind of genius. 'There is not one high wall,' he says, 'but two high walls between the classes and the masses, so called, and that erected in self-defence by the exploited is the higher and more difficult to climb.' Mr. Reynolds, almost alone of modern writers, has scaled this wall. . . . Apart from its high literary value, it is full of a most manly and profound philosophy. . . . We can only refer to the many exquisite pieces of description of weather and scenery with which the book is strewn. They are never forced, but find their place naturally in the argument or the picture."

SPECTATOR—"An extremely interesting and valuable book. . . . A study remarkable for its sympathy and poetry as well as its minute observation."

DAILY NEWS.—"An inspiringly real and outspoken book is A Poor Man's House, with something of the largeness and salty sting of the sea in it, which forms the background and gives a wholesome, breezy tone to the whole. . . . We have nothing but praise for the book's force and truth. The author has many qualities underlying his strong literary gift. He has a keen eye for character, a racy sense of humour, a broadly hearty enjoyment of human nature. But it is his intellectual sincerity, strongly marked, that gives his picture of life balance and fairness, and reinforces his artistic talents. All the fisherfolk in the book, and delightful people most of them are, are drawn with the sharp, exact touch of a born observer of men."

MR. C. F. G. MASTERMAN in the NATION.—"A fascinating volume, combining observation and a high gift for writing with a wide human sympathy."
