

ment of intention to violate blockade, 35; on ignorance of owner, 37; on inquiries by neutral vessels of blockading cruisers, 37; on neutral vessels going near blockaded port, 38; on breach of blockade by egress, 39; on neutral right to carry on commerce with blockaded port by means of inland communication, 40; on right of British subjects to trade with ports blockaded by British cruisers, through the intervention of neutrals, 42; on right of interior countries to import and export through an enemy's port, 42; on liberation of blockade-runners, if captured after discontinuance of blockade, 43; on continued voyages, 43; on adhesion of penalty during one voyage, 43; on right of vessels of half-civilized powers to violate blockade, 44; on right of neutral merchants to cover enemy's goods with their own, 45; on confiscation as penalty of breach of blockade, 46; on distinction between cargo and vessel, 47; on right of captor to refuse to assign reason for capture, 50.

T.

TIME must be allowed for news of blockade to spread, 19.
 TREATY between Great Britain and Russia (1801) terminating Armed Neutrality, 13;
 between Great Britain and the United States (1794) regulating blockade.
 TREATIES regulating blockading force, 30.

U.

UNFORTIFIED places, blockade of, 14.

V.

Vattel on blockade, 3; On penalty of violation of blockade, 46.

W.

WANT of water or provisions not an excuse for breach of blockade, 23.
 WHEATON on proclamation of blockade, 18; on want of the necessaries of life as an excuse for breach of blockade, 24; on distinction between vessel and cargo, 48.

177
 227511^xc