Mass Meeting at Labor Temple to Protest Their Conviction.

In celebration of May Day, a mass meeting was held in the Labor Temple last night, under the auspices of the defence committee of the Toronto District Trades Council. This was in the nature of a sequel to the demon-stration at Queen's Park on Satur-day, and was held for the purpose of considering the strike situation at considering the strike situation at Winnipeg. Sergeant Dunn, representing the Returned Soldiers' and Sailors' Labor party at Winnipeg, in referring to the connection of returned men with the strike, stated that the movement had been financed, for the most part, by the money paid to the veterans as gratuity and not by Bolsheviki gold. An extraordinary part of the trial of the strike leaders, said the speaker, was that the officiating judges had maintained that it was not necessary for the crown to prove the necessary for the crown to prove the accused guilty, but for the accused to prove themselves innocent. Another point of the address was to the effect that if returned soldiers wish to atthat if returned soldiers wish to attain their objectives it would be necessary for them to join forces with the labor unions. It was the idea of the party which the speaker represented, that all chartered companies who had more than a certain amount of profit during the way should be more than a certain amount of profit during the way should be more than a certain amount of profit during the way should be more than a certain amount of profit during the way should be more than a certain amount of profit during the way should be more than a certain amount of the way should be more than a certain amount of the way should be more than a certain amount of the way should be more than a certain amount of the way should be more than a certain amount of the way should be more than a certain amount of the way and the way and the way and the way and the way are the way are the way and the way are the way are the way are the way and the way are the wa tribute to a fund large enough to reestablish the men comfortably.

Only Workers Right to Live.

Isaac Bainbridge, the next speaker, warned the men of Toronto that they might find themselves in the same position as the strikers of Winnipeg any time. "Revolutions," he said, "are not created, they grow out of the social and political conditions existing at the time. The actions of the labor party are dedetermined not by their ideals, but by the condition under which they work and live." In the speaker's opinion it is not necessary to go to Russia to find evidence of the brutal treatment accorded to the working class, we find the same conditions existing, he asserted, in our own slums and mines, etc. He went on to insist that workingmen were the only people who had a moral, or any other right to live, because they earn that right by toil and sweat. "One (so-called) ignorant brainless, menial, dirty workingman is of greater importance to humanity than a thousand statesmen."

Tells About Trial,

Alderman H. Heaps, of Winnipeg, who had been tried with the strike leaders and acquitted, was then called upon to tell of the proceedings at the trial last June. The preliminary hearing, he said, had lasted 28 days, which was a most unusual thing and during that time he and others had been confined in the penitentiary. The authorities had offered to release them if they would give their promise not to participate in any strike movement or make public speeches. The leaders could not see how they could consistently give their promise, and consequently they remained in jall. After R. B.

Proceeding to give details of the evidence brought against them, Ald. Heaps stated that the prosecution had called 130 witnesses, 35 of whom were employers of labor and 58 members of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police. The alderman spoke, as all the previous speakers had done, indignantly of the part played in the proceedings by the Mounted Police, stating that that unit had brought shame on its heretofore glorious reputation by acting as spies at labor meetings. He then asserted that a member of the Mounted Police had been at the head of the riots which the strike leaders had been sentenced for instigating, and that Sergt. Reeves of the same unit had distributed strike propaganda to the citizens of Winnipeg. The speaker's comrades were held responsible for the distribution of that propaganda and were now in jail for crimes committed at the government's orders by government agents.

orders by government agents.

Pass Resolutions.

At the close of the meeting the following resolutions were passed: "Be it resolved that we call upon the minister of justice and the attorney-general of Manitoba to remove all restrictions in the way of an appeal to the privy council in behalf of R. B. Russell, now incarcerated in the penitentiary, and that we call upon the Dominion government to release all Winnipeg strike leaders."

Both resolutions were carried unanimously. In putting the first resolution, the mover stated that he was convinced there were not four lawyers in Great there were not four lawyers in Great Britain who would have prostituted the legal profession in the same way as the crown had done at Winnipeg. It was intended to take the case to England, where fairer consideration would be given to the case.

Some of them actually laughed outright as they stated their price, as if to say: "Well, they are $6 a bag and what are you going to do about it." There was not a big supply of potatoes offered for sale, but what there were found a ready sale, and the peculiar part of the whole thing was that it was not the grocers or the shippers who were buying them, but the women.

Mrs. Brooks, wife of the murdered man, was in court, and identified a wrist-watch, knife, gun, and various other articles as having belonged to her husband when he went on the hunting trip which ended in his death. Hecko gave a long account of the alleged murder to Judge Goyette of Hull. He identified Armand Beauregard gard as the person with whom he went to Montfort.
