

GREEKS THINK TIME FOR WAR HAS COME

Roumania's Action May Force Them to Follow Her Lead

Fear a Greater Bulgaria - Resentment Felt Against the German Emperor For His Alliance With the Turks

(By Adamantios Th. Polyades in New York Times, Wednesday.)

One has to know Athens to know the feelings of the Hellenic people, and to know Greek sentiment in order to realize what the events of the last forty-eight hours have meant to Greece. The capital was always under the impression that Roumania would never do anything that would put her face to face against Germany. The many Greeks in Bucharest and Constantinople and Galatz, had for years seen the financial domination of the Teuton empire; they found that next to the Roumanian and German language was the one in which they could make themselves understood, and they saw that the Hellenism was sitting on the Roumanian throne, and they could not believe that Roumania would ever rise in arms against the Teutons.

Since the beginning of the war Greece on several occasions made it clear to Roumania that she intended joining in the war against Bulgaria; but it was found that Roumania was not ready to do this, and it was argued in Athens that common sense and no other consideration moved the Roumanians to keep a safe policy, which was advisable for Greece to follow. On the assumption that Roumanian and Greek interests were identical, Greece maintained a neutral policy, supported in this stand by the General Staff of the army, which thought that participation in the war would be disastrous for the country and the future of the Hellenism.

It has taken, however, all the tremendous popularity of King Constantine to uphold this policy, in view of what has been happening in Macedonia for the few months past. King Constantine was never put in doubt by the great majority of the people. They thought indeed that the Roumanian king was never put in doubt by the great majority of the people. They thought indeed that the Roumanian king was never put in doubt by the great majority of the people.

Greece was too small to undertake an attack on the Dardanelles, even with the assistance of the Allies. She was too small for an attack against Bulgaria and the Teutons, even with the help of the contingents of the Entente had left winter in Saloniki. It is she too small, or too weak, today, besides the 800,000 allied troops in Saloniki and Greek Macedonia, she has the actual co-operation of Roumania's half million soldiers, assisted by just as many Russians in their march south.

This is the question put before every Greek today. And to this there is but one answer: Greece has become neutral, and at an end. When King Constantine takes General Doussanos out of the picture, and appoints in his stead General Moushopoulos, who handled successfully the delicate situation in which he as Greek commander of Saloniki found himself when that city was all but dominated by the Allies, it means that things have come to a head. Colonel Metaxas, who ranks as one of the most able officers of the general staff, has followed his chief out of office for no other reason than because he accused of pro-German leanings. The main thing, however, for Greece, at the present moment is that she has a general staff enjoying the confidence of the Entente. As for the Greek people, they always have been for the Allies.

But Greece is not going to fight for the sake of the Entente. Greece's troops are not mercenaries; they are the whole Greek nation in arms. What they are ready to fight for is to crush an hereditary foe, who was becoming stronger with German military assistance and German aid. The prospect of a victorious Bulgaria, stretching on three seas, the Black, the Aegean and the Adriatic, is anything but reassuring to Greece. The Balkan peoples want to live and prosper, and they cannot do so long as there is a Germanized Bulgaria among them. The Balkan peoples fought hard to drive the Turk out of Europe and they have no sympathy with Germany when she is trying to put Turkey back on the map.

RICH DINNER HOST IN SLAVE INQUIRY

Charge Made That Young Women Guests Received $100 Favours

New York, Sept. 1.—Private dinners in uptown restaurants that get around the 1 o'clock law by means of club licenses, and others held in studios and the private homes of men well known in the financial and artistic circles of New York, in which it is charged that the women guests were secured in violation of the white slave law, are now under the scrutiny of the district attorney's office.

This development of the vice inquiry follows the complaint of the mother of a young girl who was at one of these affairs, held in the hope of a millionaire well-known in art and literary circles. The girl in this case furnished the names of the millionaire host and of other present wealthy girls who had named identified most of the remaining guests. At this and similar affairs the women, usually between the ages of 18 and 20, are seated at tables with the ranks of chorus girls and the stage-struck who hunt Broadway agencies looking for engagements, received costly favors, $100 bills tucked away in the napkins being the most popular souvenir.

Whether or not indictments will follow in these cases depends on how clear the district attorney's office is able to demonstrate the terms on which the girls were recruited. In this connection the gifts of $100 in cash to each are so important that a lawyer, a guest at at least one of these affairs, is deemed to have advised that the payment of money was dangerous.

Startling Story Told

The story of the particular dinner under immediate investigation as told by the witnesses thus far is such a re-creation as has not been heard in the Criminal Court building, since Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, testifying to save her husband, described the parties held in Stanford White's apartments in Madison Square tower. The male guests included several young millionaires and at least one prominent city official, who has long been the friend of the host. This official and his artist millionaire host, were not about their usual haunts next day, but friends of both were busy trying to make it appear that the left-in-the-Convalescent Home $10 to the Military Hospital in St. James street, $20 to be used by him as he sees fit, and the other $10 to be used by the ladies of the district, for Christmas parcels for the soldiers.

ACCIDENT

Leonard Desjardis, son of Owen Devlin, of Millidge avenue, was hit badly last night on Tuesday morning at his home, 100 St. John street, when he was employed. He was caught in the belt of the machine. Dr. F. J. Hogan of the city also saw the writer, Nesbit Thaw, testifying to save her husband, described the parties held in Stanford White's apartments in Madison Square tower. The male guests included several young millionaires and at least one prominent city official, who has long been the friend of the host. This official and his artist millionaire host, were not about their usual haunts next day, but friends of both were busy trying to make it appear that the left-in-the-Convalescent Home $10 to the Military Hospital in St. James street, $20 to be used by him as he sees fit, and the other $10 to be used by the ladies of the district, for Christmas parcels for the soldiers.

GERMANS GET INTO BRITISH DEFENCES ON SMALL FRONTAGE

The dinner became so uproarious that it is the official in question found an excuse for leaving while the party was still at the table. News of the affair reached the district attorney through a relative of one of the girls.

THE GREEK SITUATION

London, Sept. 1.—Ward Price, to whom the despatch relative to King Constantine is credited, is the official British press representative, designated by the government to act for all British publications in that area. Nevertheless his despatches are subject not only to the Greek censorship, but to the French military censorship which is in control of all lines of communication from Athens. The fact that both censures, as well as the British censorship in London have permitted this despatch to come through, is significant. It is possible that the king may have departed secretly from his exile, as reported by Price yesterday, and that his absence was concealed from the newspaper correspondents there.
