—:o:—

SYNOPSIS.

The patrons of a boarding house are described seriatim. A man named Paton is described as having hair very red and curly, small grey eyes with a merry twinkle, a turned up inquisitive nose, bright round face and beautiful teeth. There was a special passenger known as Father Weatherspoon; and a child, Clara, the daughter of a commercial traveller, also a widow. An improvement in Paton's appearance is soon perceived and he began going out each evening. The child says he has got a sweetheart at last. Paton makes no explanation, but later he tells the author he is engaged to be married and invites him to call on the object of his love, Miss Spooner, who, with her mother, lives in a humble circumstances. They are Southerners, and have seen better days. En route to make the call they see the author's cousin, Nelly, who is a queen of society. Paton purchases a gaudy breast pin. They call on the Spooners, who are described, and Paton presents the pin to Miss Ida Spooner, who is pale, hungry looking and delicate. The author thinks about Vampires and changes his boarding house. He calls on his cousin, Nelly, (Mrs. Maury), on a special occasion about a year later, and learns from her that Paton and Miss Spooner are married. Leaving the house he meets a young lady press reporter to whom he talks about society generally.

CHAPTER III.

It was again fully a year after this that I ran down one hot summer's day to a sea-shore place to pass an afternoon and to sleep. It was what is called a "fashionable resort," where the fashionable person is never met with by any possible chance, and one wanders lonely amid a sea of strange faces as completely unkown as if one were suddenly stranded on the South Sea Islands. I have always wondered if these people knew each other, but it is difficult to discover, as they quickly form friendships which have every appearance of being long-standing intimacies. I was glad of the certain isolation. I was in one of those conditions, mental and physical, when we hate our kind,—in that old bone mood Dr. Johnson so deprecated, when the great nervous centres fail to respond to the demands of intellect, affection, sentiment, even of taste, and all the pulsations of life are arrested and replaced by lassitude and disgust. I had begun to find no joy even in music, to wonder if Wagner was not overrated, and to believe Bismarck a political charlatan, to imagine our own Federal government to be rotten, our local one impotent, and to wonder if the end of all things was not at hand. I doubted mankind in general, womankind in particular, and myself in toto. Everything seemed tending to the fulfilment of disastrous prophecy. I concluded that the sea-air and a plunge in the surf might be efficacious. If not, there was always Europe. I was evidently overdone. A jaded tired brain and disordered nerves will make genius shrivel, faith bitter, affection pale, and passion dry up. All the mechanism of life becomes a weary lesson learned by rote, tedious and futile in the learning.

The sail down did me good. There was a delicious breeze, which, when I landed, I found still pervading the cliffs. They overhung the long low beaches, and at this early hour—it was a little past noon—they—the beaches and cliffs—were almost deserted. A row of trees bordered a road which ran parallel with the embankment, and their welcome shade allured me. At the edge of the precipice the sun beat down with intolerable heat, and it was oppressive in spite of the seawinds that blew. I kept, therefore, to the road under the maples, lounging lazily, my hands in my pockets, feeling already that the cloud which had enveloped my brain in the hot town where I had imprudently lingered too late that summer was beginning to lift a little, as if with a promise of renewed courage. Suddenly I heard something crunching the gravel behind me, and a fretful feminine voice saying, "I tell you I am cold, Can't you take me into the sun?" and a man replied, "Well, it's so infernally hot."

"You're improperly dressed in that pot hat and thick vest. You look like a guy, too, that way."

"The fact is," replied the male voice, good-humoredly, "I haven't had the time to look up my linen suit and straw hat. They've kept me at the store every evening until it was nigh on midnight, and when I get home I am kind of sleepy."

I made way for the speakers to pass, but what a train of halfburied remembrances had their voices awakened! I saw again the young widow and little Clara, Mr. Nast and Miss Hodgson; the physician and the lawyer's daughter whirled before me once more, while my ears seemed to vibrate to a faint echo of the "Allez toujours."

"Why, Mr. Milburn!"

Miss Spooner—Mrs. Paton, I should say had suddenly recognized me. She was reclining in a wheeled chair which her gallant husband was propelling from behind. She was prettily dressed in a pink cotton gown which fitted well her slight person, and its reflection cast upon her pallor a glow which, heightened by the sun and vivid air, was distinctly becoming to her. It was noticeable that the yellow, almost orange hue of her complexion wore at our first and only meeting had given place to a healthier tone. Her skin now looked like white beeswax, and was in its way handsome. There seemed to be, too, a little more fulness about the lines of her mouth and lips, whose dominant characteristics, however, still remained those of discontent. Her eyelashes and hair, possibly through the effect of the sharp sunlight, seemed to have caught a brighter tint, and, although there was still a certain incompleteness about her, I had to confess that she had greatly improved.

Paton was less changed. Yet he was changed too, but it was not for the better. He looked thin, his mouth a little less ripe and fresh, and his eyes were a trifle bloodshot, as are those of men who work by candle-light. There were wrinkles and a certain looseness of the skin under them. I have studied medicine, among other things, and I never like to see skin flabbiness about a person's eyes, He seemed to be suffering from the heat; his forehead was flushed. He had pushed back his hat, and the perspiration dropped from under it. Otherwise he was as jolly as ever. He smiled all over at the sight of me, grasping my hand and shaking it warmly.

"I just arrived on the train," he explained. "Mrs. Paton and her mother are passing the summer here. I can't get down very often. To-day they let me off early. I've got a holiday until Tuesday. That's all I'll get all summer. They've doubled my salary since I knew you," he said, "but double money means double work." And he laughed. "I am down at the store half the night lately. My wife was just scolding me because I had'nt dressed like a dude to come out among the fine folks, but I was telling her I haven't the time. I never was much on style."

Mrs Paton in the mean while was arranging the folds of her frock, and establishing her white hat more firmly on her head, with its flutter of pink ribbons. Were these manœuvres for my benefit? I wondered.

"Has you health improved? I asked her. I am something of a doctor myself, and you appear to me to be looking so much stronger."

She replied, rather pettishly, "Oh, I'd be well enough if I only had somebody to wheel me about more. Mamma is not strong enough, and Mr. Paton can hardly ever come down. What I want is the sun. I was raised in the South, and I reckon I need the heat. It's chilly on the piazzas, and I get dull."

"Are you not able to walk yet?" I asked.

"Yes a little every day now. The doctor says I will soon be all right."

"You look as bright as a rose, Ollie," said her husband adoringly, "and I'll have you on your legs again before this August's over. Here goes for the sun."

And he turned the wheeled chair out towards the cliffs.

I accompanied them only a few steps. The heat and glare were unpleasant and I promised to see them again after dinner. They were stopping at a boarding-house not far from my hotel. I noticed that at her husband's last exclamation Mrs. Paton had looked rather pleased than otherwise, but instead of turning her head gratefully in his direction she had glanced furtively at me out of the corner of one of her eyes, as if to see if I too thought her "as bright as a rose."

That evening, sauntering aimlessly about with my cigar, an impulse of friendliness towards my old acquaintance—he had urgently made the request that I should call—led my steps in the direction of the white green-shuttered mansion which he had indicated to me as the momentary shelter of his marthial joys—or woes. Which? I asked myself. I unlatched the gate, walked up the path of white pulverized shells which shone like snow in the clear moonlight, and the first person I saw upon the piazza was Paton's mother-in-law. She, at least, was unaltered. She wore a black net shawl over her shoulders, and a bit of black lace upon her hair, tied under her chin. She was conversing with a stout lady in a dark satin gown which fitted so snugly over her bosom that imminent explosion seemed probable. This lady I knew to wear enormous solitaire diamonds in her ears, and many massive gold bangles trembled at her two fat wrists.

Mrs. Spooner rose to greet me. She did so with an evident excitement of titillated vanity, and, several other women having joined the group, presented me with a certain ostentation to each and all in turn, as a friend from the city. "Mrs. Shelton," she said,—which proved to be the name of the stout lady,—"knows a friend of yours. She knows Mrs. Milburn Maury, who, I reckon, is a relative of yours."

"Now, Mrs. Milburn Maury and my cousin Nelly are one and the same person, as I have before explained, and, while I could not question the fact that Mrs. Shelton knew Nelly, I found myself wondering if Nelly knew Mrs. Shelton.

"Yes," said Mrs. Shelton, "I know Mrs. Milburn Maury very well,—or rather my daughter and she are acquainted. My daughter thinks she is fascinating,—and that there is nobody like her."

I acknowledged this tribute to my relative's attractions by a civil though perfunctory bow.

"I declare, Mr. Milburn," said Mrs. Spooner, "it does me good to meet you again. My gracious! how time flies, and how many changes since!"

Mrs. Shelton now went to fetch a shawl, and the group dispersed, the others wandering to the other end of the piazza, where the male members of the establishment, the husbands and fathers, were sitting in a row with chairs tilted against the whitewashed walls, smoking, and reading the evenrng papers. A kerosene lamp which was suspended to the ceiling quashed the soft smell of the pervading sea with its poignant greasy odor.

"You must find Ollie," said Mrs. Spooner, "My daughter, Mrs. Paton, I mean,—looking right smart. She is getting strong, and that weakness in the knees is almost cured. The doctors say in six months she will be a well woman. What I have suffered no one will ever know! When I look at her now and think what she'd have a right to expect, and what she's got it makes me mad. But I suppose what's done's done. I wanted my son-in-law to let us go to Europe this summer, but he says he can't afford it. I declare!"—and she laughed,—"I tell him he's getting stingy since he's got a better salary."

"I find him looking rather thin," I said, a trifle stiffly. "You must not allow him to overtax his strength. He has pluck and energy, but——"

I noticed thar Mrs. Spooner's attention was wandering, and that her faded eyes, as expressionless on the disk of her sallow visage as two cold potatoes forgotten on a platter, were turned towards the main entrance of the house.

"Ho, Olivia! Ho Olivia! Here's Mr. Milburn come to see you."

At this summons Mrs. Paton appeared in the door-way. It was the first time I had ever seen her on her feet. She stood taller than I expected. She wore the same pink gown, but her hair was adorned by a silver arrow pricked through its masses, instead of the white hat of the morning, and she opened her corsage at the throat with a bit of white lace. Her neck was extremely white. I remembered the epithet "aristocratic" which in the flush of his early infatuation Paton had bestowed upon his beloved.

"Aristocratic"? Well, yes, almost.

"You are surprised to see me on my feet," she said, smiling, "but I came and walk quite a good deal now. My husband only has to carry me up-stairs. He says I am getting heavy, too."

Mrs. Spooner, who was a great talker, here interrupted her daughter with a long dissertation on the difficulty of keeping her acquaintance down to desirable limits in a place of this kind, and the brilliant social aureole which encircled the brow of her friend Mrs. Shelton was especially burnished and made to glint and shine for my edification. Many of the people, she said, were vulgar and low-born, and she did not wish Mrs. Paton to mix with them. The gentry of her own country had always accused her of exclusiveness. She had not come into the land of her enemies—she emphasized "enemies"—to be more careless in her choice of a circle. She desired the best or none.

The passionate "Ego" of people who seem to us unimportant, mere ciphers, occupying no place whatever in the world's economy, causes us often to stand in dumb amasement, filling us with impatience and contempt. But it may be the compensation Providence has tenderly granted to them for their insignificance.

Wearying of subjects whose personality makes them always somewhat dangerous ground, I endevored to turn their attention to the more impersonal texts of Nature. I spoke to them of the grandeur of this lonely shore in its bold curves and vigorous stretches, of the lovely night, and of the delicious air. I even ventured to ask the ladies if they had seen a special kind of interesting and beautiful shell for which these beaches where famous. But the glories of sea, of sky, of land, touched no answering chords in the breasts of my companions. I soon found they had seen nothing,—nothing but themselves; and they continued, with the volubility of their sex, to dwell only upon their own petty experience. Mrs. Spooner, indeed, seemed to be a species of perambulating autobiography. I recognize that there are two forms of egoism: the one craves approbation, an audience, sympathy,—which was Mrs. Spooner's; the latter is self-absorbed and self-sufficient,—which is mine.

Mrs. Shelton now again joined us, enveloped in a red velvet toga, and proceeded to ask me innumerable and minute questions as to the past, present, and future movements of Mrs. Milburn Maury, to which the Spooner ladies listened with a great deal of keen and awed curiosity. Having been told Paton had gone down the road to smoke a cigar, I made an excuse to join him, and said my good-nights. As I reached the gate, Mrs. Paton called after me:

"Ho, Mr. Milburn! When you meet my husband, tell him I want to go up. Tell him I am tired. It's very cold out here. I wish him to come in right quickly."

I did meet him a few yards from the house.

Possibly all of this grip that we hear so much of was engendered by the accumulating multitudes of secret societies that are now investing the land. Each one is said to invent a new grip, and this prevalent malady may be the aggravated result.

Everybody knows that at this season the blood is filled with impurities, the accumulation of months. All these impurities and every trace of scrofula, salt rheum, or other disease may be expelled by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. Be sure to get Hood's.

Fathers and Sons.

Fathers and sons as well as wives and daughters need a purifying tonic medicine in Spring to prepare the system for the hot season and drive out the impurities accumulated in winter. B. B. Caught in a Shaft.

A frequent source of accident is found in shafting. Great care should be used and a supply of Hagyard's Yellow Oil kept on hand in case of wounds, bruises, sprains, burns, or scalds. It is the promptest pain reliever obtainable.

A Canadian Case.

The case of Mrs. E. A. Storey, of Shetland, Ont., is remarkable proof of the efficacy of Burdock Blood Bitters in Headache. She writes: "For over 40 years I was a martyr to headache, having severe attacks about once a week. Have now used 3 bottles of B. B. B. and have had no attack for over 4 or 5 months."

The Single Tax.

The single tax may relieve poverty but as a remedy for painful ailments it cannot compare with Hagyard's Yellow Oil the old reliable cure for rheumatism, neuralgia, croup, sore throat, lumbago, colds and inflammatory diseases.

Shiloh's Consumption Cure.

This is beyond question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold, a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of Consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10c., 50c. and $1. If your lungs are sore, chest, or back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by Parker Bros., Market Square, G. W. Hoben, North End, S. Waters, West End.

NOTICE.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Traders, Manufacturers and owners of Weights, Measures and Weighing Machines generally are hereby notified that the Inspection Act provides the following regulations and act accordingly:

1. The Weights and Measures Act provides for a regular biennial inspection of all Weights and Measures used for trade purposes, as well as for irregular inspection of the same (which may be made at any time when deemed necessary by the Inspector), and it also imposes a heavy penalty on any trader or other person who wilfully obstructs or impedes an inspector or assistant inspector in the performance of his duty under said Act, or who refuses to produce the whole of his weights and measures for inspection when called upon to do so by an inspecting officer.

2. Every trader, manufacturer and owner of weights, measures, and weighing machines when paying money to Inspectors or Assistant Inspectors of Weights and Measures for verification fees, is entitled to, and is specially requested to demand from the officer who makes the inspection, an official certificate ("Form O, 6") with the words "Original for the Trader" printed at the head thereof) properly filled out and stamped, and also at the same time to carefully ascertain whether or not the stamps attached to such certificate correspond exactly in the value the amount of cash paid. Traders are requested to bear in mind that certificates of verification are of no value when the proper inland stamps covering the full amount of fees charged are attached.

3. Each and every one of these official certificates are specially requested to keep them carefully for one year, and in order to secure their safe keeping it would be advisable to placard them in a conspicuous position in the manner in which ordinary license certificates are done, for it must be distinctly understood that all traders who are found to produce their proper stamped certificates, when asked to do so by an Inspector or assistant Inspector, will be liable, and probability, have to pay over again their verification fees.
