A valuable diamond lay twinkling 650 a.m.—For Dundas, Hamilton and A valuable diamond lay twinkling on a platform at Paddington Station, London, undisturbed for nearly five hours the other day, until restored to its owner. A military officer, after hurrying to catch the Irish mail, discovered soon after the express had started for Fishguard that a diamond had fallen out of his ring. When the train stopped at Reading he wired to his sister in London telling her of his loss, and saying that a transfer porter who conveyed his luggage might afford a clue. The porter was discovered, and retraced his steps to the platform, where the diamond was no ticed twinkling from a tiny hole in the wooden platform.
