RETALIATION IS JUSTIFIABLE.

There is a war of neighbors on between Sarnia and Port Huron. The Americans began it by enforcing the alien labor law against a few Canadians employed on the American side and threatening to enforce it against others. Naturally the Canadians are talking retaliation. The Sarnia Observer says:

"Mayor Watson has given notice to the police to secure the names of every Port Huron citizen who is employed in Sarnia, and at what place of business they are so employed. This course is taken on account of the action of the Port Huron customs authorities in interfering with the few Sarnians who find employment in that city. If Messrs. Avery and Pettit persist in their petty meanness to the Sarnians who are employed in Port Huron the business men of that city and any Port Huronites who find employment on this side of the river will find out that Sarnia citizens will not sit idly by and allow themselves to be overruled by overzealous customs officials who seem to have an antipathy for everything Canadian. Our citizens desire to live in harmony and have nothing but good will for our neighbors, but they must not for a moment expect that Sarnia will not retaliate if circumstances call for such action."

There is supposed to be an alien labor law in Canada, but there might as well be for all that is done to enforce it. If it were possible it would be desirable that such laws should be allowed to remain dead letters; but it does not seem possible. So long as the Americans persist in rigorously enforcing the law on their side there will be a demand for retaliation on this side. There are some people to whom it is a mistake to show kindness. They are unable to appreciate it, and they usually abuse it and trample on it. There is only one way of dealing with such people, and that is by doing them with their own medicine.

PETTICOAT INFLUENCE IN THE ARMY.

The urgent need for reform in the army is now a very general topic with the people of Great Britain. The South African war opened the eyes of the public long ago, and prepared the people for the declaration of the Commander in Chief a few weeks since, that the troops in a certain great military centre were unfit for active service. No doubt army reform will be a leading question at the coming elections. In all the leading public prints the demand for reform and a reformer is reiterated. The abuses are many; some of them subtle, some of them deep rooted; some of them confined to the military system; some of them closely involved with the social system. Singularly enough, petticoat influence is held responsible for much that is defective in the army system. A writer in The King, a well known illustrated paper, uses some very plain language in discussing the subject. Here is a sample quotation:

"I have alluded to petticoat influence in the army. It is an evil of old standing, as every old soldier knows too well, and is the crutch and stay of incapacity and maladministration. Could not one name senior and distinguished officers, whose official influence is at the disposal of a mere unutterable thing? What is the use of the service M.P.'s? Some have demanded, 'Why don't they tackle abuses vigorously in the House? Is it not conceivable that a member possessed of a wife with social ambitions might hesitate to expose himself and partner to the social taboos, managed by the ministerial petticoats, which he knows would be rigidly enforced in the interests of the party? Have we not, too, known many a garrison, whose nominal commander was the mild mannered old gentleman in the Queen's uniform, but whose real presiding influence was the petticoated genius which managed his household? I myself recollect a command which was practically run by a little chattering, meddling, whose podgy flanks had been padded bald by sycophant subalterns recognizing the surest way to headquarters influence."

Even Lord Roberts himself, splendid soldier that he is, is not held free from petticoat influence, and it is said that since Lady Roberts joined her husband in South Africa, quite a new kind of officer has sprung up—men who are much more at home in the Bible than in the mysteries of tactics and strategy, while men who are known to be thorough soldiers, but who may have some spots on their past, are relegated to the back benches. Much good cannot fail to come from the present thorough overhauling before the public gaze of the whole army system.

The whole number of deaths in Philadelphia for the week ending Sept. 15, as reported at the health office, was 420, an increase of 56 as compared with the corresponding week in 1899. Of this total 51 deaths resulted from consumption of the lungs. The next highest assigned cause was trouble of the stomach and bowels, which is credited with 25 deaths. It will be seen that consumption is the King of Disease.

THE MOTHER

with a nursing baby has two lives to support. Her flesh, strength and vitality are taxed to the utmost, and must be maintained or both will surely fail.

Scott's Emulsion will keep up the mother's strength and vitality. It also enriches the baby's nourishment, and supplies the elements necessary for proper growth and development of bones, teeth and tissue.

See and try it, all druggists, SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, Toronto.

Hamilton Times: Some people talk too much. Of this class are two Chicago preachers. Speaking of the storm at Galveston, Rev. J. W. Clayton, of Euclid Ave. Methodist church, said: "God never sent that awful storm; natural conditions produced it." Rev. Frank C. Bruner, of Kensington M. E. Church, said: "Storms are full of thrilling instruction. They are history makers. They have been interpreted to mean God's judgment for their appalling wickedness. The view is irrational, because storms afflict the innocent, which would declare the injustice of God. It is our judgment storms are Satan-born." To the layman there is something very absurd in that sort of talk about an Omnipotent Deity, and his universe. When the pulpit has nothing but stuff like that to offer the pews a judicious silence or a long fishing expedition is in order.

A traveller tells the Mail and Empire that he thought in Welland Mr. McCleary could win easily against Mr. German, and in Lincoln and Niagara Mr. Lancaster would give Mr. Gibson a close race. In Haldimand and Monck, the Hon. Dr. Montague would be elected by a good majority. He found the Conservatives in every constituency united and enthusiastic. In Wentworth he thought E. D. Smith would be the next representative. His party was working hard and would elect him. In South Norfolk, Col. Tisdale's opponent is not nearly so popular as the colonel, and will suffer defeat at the ex-minister's hands, but in North Norfolk Mr. Charlton would in all likelihood be returned. Asked as to the Hamiltons, the gentleman said that two strong Conservative candidates could carry the city. The party there, he said, was thoroughly united. Incidentally the same gentleman said he was willing to wager that David Henderson would be re-elected in Halton and Hon. Clarke Wallace in West York. He had been through these counties and knew what the feeling was.

A CAMPAIGN WITICISM.

Toronto Mail.
Mr. F. H. Holland coined at the Cobourg demonstration a sentence which was as witty as it is true: "Mr. Foster deals in figures; but never figures in details."

THE FORCE OF HABIT.

Hamilton Herald.
Just see the force of habit. A convention of West Elgin Liberals ended in confusion because it was discovered that, in the voting for candidates, the ballot box had been stuffed.

SECOND THOUGHTS.

Ottawa Journal.
Police Magistrate Jeffs, of Hamilton, intimates that he is sorry about that decision of his that he had no right to convict a gambler a person running a poker dive. He says he had not seen the latest amendments to the Criminal Code. Well, the next best thing to always giving just decisions is to admit that an unjust one was a mistake.

WHAT THE DOMINION THINKS.

Ridgeway Dominion.
Mr. Arch. Campbell was nominated by the West York Liberals on Saturday and will retire from politics after election day.

A local contemporary says Mr. Gordon will have a "walk over" in Bothwell. Election night he will think he has been run over.

Like the rest of the country Kent is ripe for a change, and T. A. Smith is an acknowledged winner.

Our senior, but lately much overlooked Liberal contemporary says that "Mr. Casey has been frequently spoken of as equal with Archie Campbell in the title to recognition for a cabinet position." No one disputes Mr. Casey's fitness for a seat in a Liberal Cabinet, but somehow, we are inclined to think Mr. Campbell will not consider the comparison a compliment.

AN UNNECESSARY SUGGESTION.

Toronto Telegram.
As a dignified rebuke to the western newspaper which says "Laurier's a Lobster," the Hamilton Times will not remark that "Tupper's a Tarantula."

THE CHALLENGE.

I heard to-day upon the street,
Where beggars sang a careless song,
A note, a tone, so wondrous sweet,
That I stood still in the throng.
But ah, I saw not those who sang:
I heard not their wild madrigal;
A thousand voices round me rang,
And sweeter still one voice I knew.
For which I'd change the fame of men,
My load unloosed, like Pilgrim's thrall,
I saw my boyhood home and all—
And heard the blackbirds, nestling, sing
Their tender songs of evening!

Clear, martial call of buried hosts,
How sure thy challenge passed the years
I saw like sentinels at their posts
A myriad forms, the place like spears
Shot through the after sunset's red,
The darkening fields, the gleam of panes;
The murky dusk, the glimmer of eyes;
The way line along the lanes;
The home-bent, dusty harvest folk;
The cornfields flamed with sunset fire;
And in our first beneath the oak,
We heard the blackbirds, nestling, sing
Their tender songs of evening!

Thus, angel of our later days
With ever hovering, unseen hand
Are flashed upon our blinded ways
The hidden things of our life's end.
We climb the rugged steps of truth,
And falter. Lo! thy helpings bring
The lesser to the greater light.
A note, a tone, the humblest thing,
Sweeps irresolute from our eyes
And there the now prays with the then
Where once our heaven was lived unseen,
And in our first beneath the oak,
We hear the blackbirds, nestling, sing
Their tender songs of evening.

—Edgar L. Wakeman.

WIDDER PEEK'S PASSING.

For the first time since her marriage Mrs. Herbert D. Ward drops her husband's name and writes: "The Supply at St. Agatha's," over the familiar and beloved name of Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. Her reason for taking up the old name again, it is said, is because her present story is purely in the line of her earlier efforts. Her admirers will believe if the best work she has done since "Gates Ajar" appeared. A brief extract follows with his feet upon the base of his little cylinder coal stove. His thin ankles shrank in the damp stockings which he had not been able to change since he came out of camp, because, owing to some personal preference of the laundress, he could not find any dry ones. His worn slippers flapped upon his cold feet when he moved. But he and on his forehead a gleam of ancient pattern and rustic out of his high arm chair was cushioned in chintz and excelsior behind his aching head; the green paper shade was his study lamp; his bookshelves books (for the old saint was a student) lay within reach upon the table; piled upon them were his manuscript sermons; and he sighed with the content of a man who feels himself to be, although unworthy, in the loving arms of luxury. A rap at the door undeceived him. His landlady put in her wretched face.

"Sir," she said, "the Widder Peek's a-dying. It's just like her to take a night like this—but she's sent for you. I must say I don't call you fit to go."

"A man is always fit to do his duty," said the old clergyman, rising. "I will go at once. Did she send any conveyance?"

"Catch her," retorted the landlady. "Why, she hasn't had the town water laid in yet, and she wants her fifteen hundred dollars; nor she won't have no hired girl to do for her, not that none of 'em will stay along of her a week, and Dobson's boy's a-dying, a-dripping from the chest, and she's a wuthless old heathen miser, the Widder Peek."

"Then there is every reason why I should not go," replied the clergyman in his authoritative voice. "Pray call the lad in from the weather and tell him I will accompany him at once."

He did look about his study sadly while he was making ready to leave it. The fire in the base-burner was quite warm, now, and his wet, much-darned stockings were drying on the stove; his books ran to the ceiling, though his floor was covered with straw matting, with odd pieces of woolen carpet for the carpet; his lamp was wheeled out of the draft; his lamp with the green shade made a little circle of light and coziness; his Bible and prayer book lay open upon the table beside the pile of the evening to the agreeable duty of selecting his discourse for Saint Agatha's. His mind and his heart were beating over with the excitement of that first event. He would have liked to concentrate and consecrate his thoughts upon that evening. As he went, coughing into the cold air, it occurred to him that the spot in his lung was more painful than he had supposed; but he pulled his old cap over his ears, and his thin overcoat up to meet it, and he tramped out cheerfully into the storm.

"Well, well, my lad!" he said in his warm-hearted way to Dobson's boy: "I'm sorry for you that you have to be out a night like this. The boy spoke of this afterward, and remembered it long for a boy. But at the time he did but stare. He stopped grumbling, however, and plunged on into the drifts ahead of him, the old rectory kicking a path for him to right and left in the wet, packed snow; for the Widow Peek lived at least a mile away, and the storm was now become a violent thing. What passed between the unmoved, neglected, dying parishioner and her pastor was not known to any but themselves, nor is there witness now to testify there. Neither does it in any way concern the record of this narrative, except as the least may concern the largest circumstance in human story. For, in view of what was to pass, it is impossible not to put the old judicial question: Did it pay? Was it worth while? When the miser's soul went out, at midnight, on the wings and the raze of that blind, black storm, did it rise gently, a subdued, forgiven spirit, humble to learn how to live again, for Christ's sake and his who gave himself—as his Master had before him—to comfort and to save? Did it pay? Do such things pay? God knows. But as long as men do not know, there will always be found a few among them who will elect to disregard the doubt, to wear the divinity of unconvincing sacrifice, and to pay its price."
