The steward out at the country club has given me a bartend er's guide and agreed to send me all the necessary liquors. Now do you agree that hereafter you'll do all your drinking here in the house in the way I propose?'

Margaret was so geniel and uncom Margaret was so geniel and uncom-plaining about it all that there was nothing for me to do but to agree, al though i did winch a little over her becoming a barmaid, even in our own home. But, to make a long story short, we carried out her plan fory ayear. Every night before dinner Margaret served me that cocktail and I road her fifteen cents tor it. Every year. Every night before draining Margaret served me that cocktail and I paid her fifteen cents for it. Every night before going to bed I had my pint of beer and Margaret made me pay her another fifteen cents. On the evenings when the neighbors came in and we had beer, or at our little din ners, when in hoor of our guests we had a bottle of wine or other drink ables, Margaret was right there with a check before we went to bed. And so it was kept up until last New Year's, when, as has been our custom since our marriage eleven years ago, we went over the year's accounts for the househo'd. At the end Margaret gave me what she called the 'booze ba'ance.'
