WHERE THE MIRACLE CAME IN. WHERE THE MIRACLE CAME IN.

Dr. Walter C. Smith, the popular Scotch poet-preacher, on one occasion tried to explain to an old lady the meaning of the scriptural expression, "Take up thy bed and walk," by saying that the bed was simply a mat or rug easily taken up and carried away.

"No, no," replied the lady, "I canna believe that. The bed was a regular four-poster. There would be no miracle in walking away wi'a bit o' mat or rug

There was in attendance at the Quinquennial Congress of the International Council of Women a real, live suffragette—one of the "Votes for women or fight" kind. Miss Mary Keegan, for such is the name of the militant advocate, has three claims to distinction; she is a play-writer, a suffragette, and is a play-writer, a suffragette, and a mative of Hamilton, Ont. She is an ac-tive member of the Women's Social and Political Association of England; in ering it with finely-shaved becaux and fact, so active a member that she can show a photograph of herself in prison

The volcano of Stromboli has been fact, so active a member that she can show a photograph of herself in prison garb, the result of participating in the late suffragette demonstrations in England. Although her visit to Canada is not as a representative of the society of which she is a member, but she is quietly doing considerable educative work here in the interests of woman suffrage. ### A PARADISE FOR ANGLERS

iss Lottie MacNiven In Rod and Gun In Canada)

Miss Lottie MacNiven, of the staff of the Cayuga Advocate, has an interesting article in this month's "Rod and Gun. in Canada," on "A Paradise for Anglers." It is splendidly illustrated and makes a very attractive four-piage story which the Times herewith prints:

The sail from Burleigh was delightful, the weather perfect, and the passengers of the "Ogennah" thoroughly only yed the day. They had lunched at Burleigh, in the beautiful Kawartha Lakes district of the Province of Ontario, and spent an hour roaming over the lovely rocks of that wildly beautiful spot.

There is something very attractive about the rocks of Burleigh. They possess such drawing powers that even the most travelled and blase of mortals, when in this region, loosen themselves from the harness of conventionality and draw deep breaths of nature, pure and unalloyed.

Herein lies one great charm of the district. There are no architectural palaces of marble and granite, such as adorn the different "Thousand Islands," and the shores of Lake Ontario, but there is nature in her purity and beauty, majestic beyond the highest flights of man's fancy or ambition. Resting for even a short space of time among these natural beauties, one forgets the existence of such things as dress suits or decolette costumes; forgets everything save the joy of living in such surrounding, and pays tribute to the God who made it all.

and the two men leaning over the ran of the deck prepared to leave the vessel.

Singularly handsome was the elder, with his high intellectual forehead and firmly set mouth. You could place him almost immediately as the man-of-affairs, who had kept his honor stainless even through successful business life.

But the struggle had told. The business life, as he further reflected, it as bad as Barrie making Tommy hang himself on fence.

"They say the fishing in these waters is the best in Canada. I have not fished for years and suppose I must be getting into my dotage, but I feel like getting into a sweater once again. I would like to get out in a boat with a trolling line. Do you suppose I can spare a few days more Ross?"

But Mr. Strong refused to move. Stretched in a hammook he lay all the afternoon, in a lovely breeze, the smoke of his fragrant cigar curling slowly upwards, and his cares slipping from him to the noise of falling water.

showly upwards, and his cares supping from him to the noise of falling water.

After dinner both sat and smoked on the upper piazza of the western side of the hotel. For some time they talked of the next day's fishing; but as the sun began to sink silence fell upon them. Slowly the great ball of fine lowered from sight, and Cameron. Lake stretched before their sight a wafy mass of gold and crimson.

Mr. Strong leaned forward. "If I were an artist," he almost whispered, "perhaps I could paint it, but it cannot be described in words."

They were down the river in a skiff with a first-class guide and everything requisite for a day's fishing before seven o'clock the next morning. Mr. Strong had the trolling line, and just as they reached the lumbermen's camp he leaned eagerly forward. "There is something on it, and it is pulling. It must be a fish!"

The guide stopped rowing. "Shall I draw it in for you, sir?" "No, no. Keep on rowing slowly; I can get it in."

Mr. Strong's eyes were flashing. The lines in the high white forehead were smoothing. He looked, save for the white locks, like a boy of fifteen years old.

"It is a beauty!" he said as he drew it in deftly, the almost forgotten skill of his boyhood's days returning in a flash.

A beauty it certainly was: Nineteen pounds and three-quarters, the scales declared it, when it was weighed at the hotel that night, with the other waskinonge and eleven bass they had captured. "Better wire Johnstone that we will not be back for a few days, but tell him to ring up if anything urgent occurs. We can get home from here while locks fished in the river, and in The business must have run smoothing, for no disturbing messages reached Mr. Strong during the month they remained in Fenelon Falls.

They fished in the river, and in Cameron and Balsam Lakes. They lunched at half a dozen different strong's step grew more buoyant and his laugh more ringing each day. The luck of their first day's fishing never deserted them during their stay. One morning they took a lunch out with them them and camped at Rosedale. It was growing towards evening as they drew in their lines, and the sun was slowly sinking from sight in a blaze of color almost beyond description.

"I would like to bivouac here all night. It reminds me of the time Paterson. Henderson and I camped at Murray Bay in our second year at Murray Bay in our second year at McGill. It seems only yesterday, but Henderson is a professor in an American university, with half a dozen letters after his name and Paterson letters after his name and Paterson has been dead for years.
