WRONG PRIDE.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

Not long ago I heard of a woman who, when her husband died, was left with a heavily mortgaged farm and a family of three small children to provide for. Her needs were desperate; she took desperate measures to meet them, donning overalls and working about the farm herself, as hard and as long as any day laborer.

The first year she managed to pay the interest on the mortgage and feed her family. The second year, with courage and determination renewed, she began to specialize in chickens and strawberries. She worked harder than ever; her hands grew rough, her complexion, coarse. But she wrung victory from defeat. The mortgage was lifted, she achieved a balance in the bank. As the children grew older she managed to send them, each in turn, to college. By and by, of course, she had men to relieve her from the drudgery of farm work.

Isn't her record one to be proud of? Wouldn't you think that those children—two girls and a boy—would be proud of their mother and make her every act an expression of gratitude to her for all they had received from her?

She Was Ashamed of Her Mother's Sacrifice.

I surely thought they would feel that way until, by chance, I met the elder daughter. I spoke to her of her mother and how much I admired her. She thought this would please the daughter, but it didn't. Instead, she froze up, saying hastily:

"Oh, that is quite exaggerated. Mother never did such things. She really never worked hard at all." I thought, naturally, that I had made a mistake. But a friend of the mother explained the mystery to me. "Oh, the children are all ashamed of the fact that their mother worked as she did. You see they have been away to college and they have new friends and new ideas, and they do the best they can to keep people from knowing that their mother really worked like a man on the farm."

She Probably Finds Excuses For Her Children.

I do not know how the mother feels. I imagine that she finds excuses for her children, as mothers do. But I cannot. This mother was a heroine if one ever lived; her children are despicable. To be ashamed of such a mother!

The case is an extreme one, perhaps; but I wonder how many other parents there are who have worked unflinchingly through all their married life to give their children better things than they knew and whose only reward is the consciousness that the children are in their hearts, if not outspokenly, ashamed of them!

Here is a Man Who is Proud of His Mother's Struggles.

Consider the contrast offered by the case of a young man whom I knew only as a very successful young specialist, with a growing, increasingly profitable practice. I spoke of his success to him, as something he must take pride in.

"I owe it to my mother," he said, promptly. "She kept a boarding-house and worked like a slave to send me through college. We were always on the narrow edge, but she never gave up. I wanted to quit but she wouldn't hear of it. Once, I remember, she became sick and the bills piled up, but her courage was never shaken. She didn't know what the word 'quit' meant."

Was I shocked by hearing what his mother had done? Hardly. Instead I felt that splendid thrill in my heart that hearing of heroism of any kind always gives one.

Everyday Etiquette.

"What should I do with my knife and fork when passing my plate for a second helping at a dinner?" asked twelve year old Mabel.

"Your knife and fork should be placed side by side on the side of your plate," her mother replied.

A Little Te Deum for These Times.

We thank Thee, Lord,
For mercies manifold in these dark days;
For heart of Grace that would not suffer wrong;
For all the stirrings in the dead dry bones;
For bold self-steeling to the time's dread needs;
For every sacrifice of self to Thee;
For ease and wealth and life so freely given;
For Thy deep sounding of the hearts of men;
For Thy great opening of the hearts of men;
For Thy close-knitting of the hearts of men;
For all who sprang to answer the great call;
For their high courage and self-sacrifice;
For their endurance under deadly stress;
For all the unknown heroes who have died;
To keep the land inviolate and free;
For all who come back from the Gates of Death;
For all who pass to larger life with Thee.
And find in Thee the wider liberty;
For hope of Righteous and Enduring Peace;
For hope of cleaner earth and closer heaven
With burdened hearts, but faith unquenchable—
We thank Thee, Lord!
