may return to the United States some time in an unofficial capacity and that he might consider professional offers at that time.

JACK MCAULIFFE COMPARES BOX ING PAST AND PRESENT.

Jack McAuliffe, the veteran retired lightweight champion, illustrates the "friendly" feeling that used to exist in the old days between fighters with a story about John L. Sullivan, Sullivan and McAuliffe were great friends, and they used to travel around the country taking all comers. John L. meeting the heavies and Mc-Auliffe taking on the lightweights. Charley Mitchell, the English heavyveight, at this particular time, had been annoying John L. with challenges. One night in a hotel in Boston, Mitchell's name was brought into the conversation and John L. bellowed: "You tell that - Englishnan that I'll knock his fool head off
